Vice-Presidents of Canadian Pacific Railway Are Here on Inspection Trip—Hotel Progress Satisfies

HOLD CONFERENCE WITH PREMIER

A brief visit is being paid in Victoria on this occasion by Mr. Grant Hall, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Mr. D. C. Coleman, vice-president in charge of Western lines. They arrived from Vancouver yesterday morning.

The vice-presidents are now in course of a periodical inspection visit. After meeting members yesterday morning on railway matters, and entertaining a number of local residents in the evening, they plan to leave again for the East this evening.

There are no matters of special importance affecting the company's interests here calling for decision at the present time. The Empress Hotel north wing is proceeding satisfactorily, with a view to occupation in the Fall, and the contracts for the new steamers for the Vancouver-Victoria night route of the British Columbia Coast Steamship Service are going forward with due expedition in Scotland.

PRINCESS VICTORIA'S FUTURE

After consultation with Captain C. D. Meroulas, manager of the Coast service, the visiting vice-presidents announced that the company had decided to recondition the Princess Victoria, veteran of the Princess fleet built up since the company acquired the service, and place the ship in commission between Seattle and Victoria as an automobile ferry steamer. The necessary work will be undertaken during the Winter.

King Bestows Orders Upon Three Doctors

LONDON July 8.—The King held a small medical investiture at Buckingham Palace this morning, receiving three doctors who attended him during his illness. Expressing his appreciation of their services the King invested Sir Humphrey Rolleston with the insignia of the Knights of the Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order and Messrs. Graham Hodgson and Lionel Whitby with the insignia of Commander of the same order.

AVERAGE SPEED

Lieut. R. L. Maitland maintained an average speed of 180.3 miles an hour.

He was fortunate in getting ready for the commencement of the flight today, for on landing at Blackpool last night his machine struck a rut and part of the tail was torn away. New parts were rushed by motor during the night. It was only by frantic efforts that mechanics got the plane ready for the start of the final half of the journey. One of the sensational features of the race was the splendid piloting of one of the three women competitors, Miss Spooner, who finished fifth in the field of forty-one original starters.

TODAY KING AND EMPIRE GIVE THANKS

At Westminster Abbey Solemn Service Inaugurates Thanksgiving in All Continents and on All Seas

PROCESSION WILL PRECEDE PRAYERS

Children of King and Queen With Leaders of Church Will Traverse Ancient Aisles

LONDON, July 8.—The grateful people of Great Britain, and the British Empire will unite tomorrow in solemn thanksgiving to God for the recovery of King George from his recent severe illness.

The sovereign himself, now recovered to health and rejoicing in the felicitations given him today on the 25th anniversary of his marriage to Queen Mary, will attend the official service in the hallowed nurture of national heroes, Westminster Abbey. There among historic memorials, the spiritual and temporal chiefs of the nation will take part in a service of praise. While the King and the Queen, accompanied by members of the royal family, engage in this public acknowledgment of his beneficent providence, similar services of prayer and song will be held in the churches throughout the United Kingdom and the world-wide Empire. Thanks will be given also for Queen Mary, a constant attendant and comforter at the king's bedside, and for the doctors and nurses who ministered tireless to the royal patient through several trying months.

The service will conclude on the imposing notes of "Te Deum Laudamus" which have rung in the ears of the presence of crowned heads in famous cathedrals since the early centuries of Christendom.

At the commencement of the service a stately procession into the grey portals and under the lofty arches of the abbey will be formed. It will be made up of an imposing line of personages with the children of the King and Queen, including the Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of York, Prince George, Princess Mary, the latter's husband, Viscount Lascelles, Prince Henry, Prince Edward, Prince Michael and Victoria Alexandra.

WOMAN IS FIFTH OUT OF FORTY-ONE

LONDON, July 8.—Flight Lieut. Atcherley, member of the British Schneider Cup team, won the King's Cup air race today at the end of a 1,169-mile flight around Britain.

The machine started from Heston Park yesterday morning with 41 airplanes taking off. They represented all the leading aeroplanes and the course included three women.

The first section of the flight was over a course of 589 miles to Blackpool where 20 pilots made a second-ful landing last night. The start from Blackpool was made from Stanley Park in the morning. The three women were still in the contest.

TRADE OF PALESTINE

GENEVA, July 6.—Money factors in Palestine by reason of mountain abroad and profits of the tourist traffic in Palestine were stated by High Commissioner Sir John Cavendish today to compensate for the deficit in the trade balance of that country. Sir John told the Mandates Commission of the League of Nations that imports into Palestine were £6,776,814, compared with exports of only £1,427,307. He explained the increase in customs revenue as due partly to the imposition of customs duties and partly to increase in commercial activity.

Presence of Premier King At Washington Conference May Complicate Matters

OTTAWA, July 6.—Suggestions contained in Washington dispatches that the scope of the proposed conference between Premier MacDonald, President Hoover and Premier Mackenzie King should be enlarged so as to permit the President and Mr. King to discuss certain matters affecting Canadian-American relations, have aroused some interest here.

According to the reports Senator Borah favors a personal talk between the President and Mr. King on such matters as the radio situation, and the movement of liquor from Canada to the United States.

While suggestions of this kind may prove beneficial in the event of the Prime Minister of Canada being present at the conference, it must be pointed out that Mr. King has never intimated in any way that he was officially aware that such a meeting is going to take place. Not only has the Canadian Prime Minister never intimated that he knew anything of the conference through official channels, but in addition, has given no indication that he intended to be present when Mr. Hoover and Mr. MacDonald meet. Presumably when the conference takes definite shape, if Mr. King is asked to be present, he will have some statement to make. Should he go to Washington various matters which are now affecting Canadian-American relations may be discussed.

Business Men Of Britain to Confer en Masse

LONDON, July 6.—British merchants are planning a visit to the Dominions en masse, arranging their schedule so that the combined business and pleasure tour will coincide with the celebration of Empire Year at the Toronto Canadian National Exhibition. Information just received by Exhibition officials from Stanley F. Talbot, general secretary of the Incorporated Sales Managers Association of the United Kingdom, gives details of the trip.

It was the Prince of Wales, always one of the Dominion's most enthusiastic and outspoken supporters, who gave the businessmen of Great Britain the idea. More than a year ago he urged that such tours be undertaken both by individuals and groups.

CREATION OF ISLAND BODY IS DEFERRED

Conservatives of Vancouver Island Undecided Yet With Regard to Central Association

CONFERENCE IS HELD AT NANAIMO

Problem of Making Organization Work Efficiently Is Canvassed to Avoid Overlapping

A MAJORITY of those in attendance at the convention called at Nanaimo yesterday afternoon for the purpose of considering the question of forming a Vancouver Island Conservative Association voted in favor of forming such an organization. So closely, however, was the gathering divided on the subject that it was the opinion immediate definite action along this line should be postponed. After about three hours' conference an adjournment was taken until Saturday, October 5, next, when the delegates will again meet and consider the matter.

In the meantime a draft of constitution which was prepared following the passing of the resolution at the Nanaimo Federal Association meet last March, which brought the gathering together yesterday, will be circulated among Conservatives, and will form the basis of the discussion at the adjourned meeting.

MUST BE UNANIMOUS

The opinion was expressed by the convention that it would be a useless thing to attempt to bring about an organization such as was planned unless the feeling among the different associations on the Island was almost unanimous in supporting it. With the vote standing twenty-three to sixteen, as counted by a show of hands, the situation was considered to need careful thought.

Early in the proceedings the question came as to whether the organization proposed if brought into existence, would be one functioning entirely independent of the Central Conservative Association of the province, or be entirely independent of that organization.

Mr P. C. Elliott, of Victoria, said he felt that such a body, if organized, should have work to do independent of the duties that devolved upon the Central Conservative Association of the province. The Vancouver Island association

In several minutes giving a start-to-stop average speed of 81½ miles per hour. This timing means that the train will be doing eighty miles an hour over some sections of the route.

Mergers Formed This Year To Date in United States, Total Ten Billion Dollars

NEW YORK, July 6 (United Press).—The trend of American industry is towards consolidation, and so far this year mergers aggregating perhaps ten billion dollars have been consummated in about fifty different industries, while dozens of more sensational amalgamations are in the making.

Overtaking the New York Central railroad as the largest banks with total resources of more than seven billion dollars.

Giant utilities account for billions more, airplane companies by the dozen have united, Radio Corporation and Victor Talking Machine joined with stocks valued at more than $600,000,000.

Continental Oil Company is being merged with Marland Oil Company in a $200,000,000 organization. Wright Aeronautic Corporation and Curtiss Airplane & Motor Company were brought together with assets of $70,000,000, while Bendix acquired accessory companies valued at $140,000,000, and Aviation Corporation formed a $200,000,000 holding company to take over Fairchild Aviation Company and seven subsidiaries.

In the utilities field, the hand of J. P. Morgan & Company has wrought the outstanding developments. Early in the year Morgan organized the United Corporation. The company represents holdings aggregating $3,000,000,000.

CONFERENCE IS HELD ON RATES APPEAL CASE

Mr. L. J. Ladner, M.P., Consults Government on Desire for Early Hearing by Federal Cabinet

APPEAL FROM RAILWAY BOARD

Conference between members of the Government and Mr. Leon J. Ladner, K.C., M.P., yesterday resulted in a decision to take the British Columbia freight rates issue to the Canadian Privy Council either in September or October. Mr. Ladner is acting as rates counsel for the Government.

The Province, Mr. Ladner said, will ask the Privy Council to hear the British Columbia case as early in the Fall as possible, and it is expected a date will be set for late September or early October. Rate questions will be before the Privy Council in the form of an appeal against the railway commission's last judgment, which granted some rate reductions to British Columbia, but not enough to satisfy the Provincial authorities.

Mr. Ladner pointed out that all these questions were on appeal from one tribunal to another and back again to the Railway Board.

George Landoy, Editor From Brussels, Belgium, Steps Back to Get Better View of Sudden Outburst of Geyser at Yellowstone Park—He Falls and Slides into Pool

Victim Pulls Himself Out But Injuries Prove Fatal

MAMMOTH SPRINGS, Yellowstone Park, July 6.—Less than forty-eight hours after he had slipped accidentally into a hot pool of water at Castle geyser, in the vicinity of the famous Old Faithful geyser, in Yellowstone Park, George Landoy, editor of Le Matin, Brussels, Belgium, died from his burns. The accident occurred late Wednesday. Landoy died at the Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel yesterday afternoon.

Accounts of the scalding were meagre in detail, but it was established that the European newspaper editor, who was a member of the Carnegie Foundation tour of European journalists, had slithered into the pool of steaming water when he stepped back to obtain a better view of the geyser's eruption.

Landoy was imagining the formation of the Grand geyser when the Castle, its near neighbor, started to erupt. He managed to pull himself out of the hot pool, and was given first aid at Old Faithful Lodge by Dr. A. A. Horner, of Chicago. Brought to Mammoth Hot Springs, Landoy was pronounced to be in a critical condition and doctors worked unceasingly to relieve his pain and save his life.

Surviving him are his brother, Francis, and his mother, both of Brussels.

The arrangements for the event have not been completed yet. A meeting, recently held of the executive of the Central Association, elected Mr. Reginald Hayward, M.P.P., chairman of the central committee in charge of the picnic.

On Monday there will be a meeting of the members of the executive of the central association will be struck for the handling of the various activities connected with the event. As there is not a great deal of time for carrying out the arrangements it is desired that all members of the executive board attend the meeting on Monday.

In the matter of selecting speakers nothing will be done until the committee for that purpose is named.

RELIEF FOR FARMERS IN WEST URGED

Associated Boards of Trade to Hear Plea for Seasonal Tariff for Protection Against Foreign Produce

PARLEY TO OPEN HERE THURSDAY

The imposition of a seasonal tariff to protect the farmers of Western Canada from the disastrous effects of the early dumping in the Western part of the Dominion of cheap fruit, vegetables, eggs and other foodstuffs from the United States, is sought in a resolution sponsored by the Malahat Board of Trade, which will be considered by the Associated Boards of Trade of Vancouver Island, at its annual convention in Victoria, this week.

The Associated Boards of Trade will be asked to strongly urge the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to take the matter up with a view to the power to have a seasonal tariff imposed with the object of correcting this evil and of relieving the Western farmer.

At least twenty-two resolutions, prepared by the various chambers of commerce and boards of trade on Vancouver Island will be dealt with at the convention. The parley will open next Thursday morning at the Chamber of Commerce, and it is expected that about 100 delegates from the trade bodies on the Island will be in attendance.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

Rev. Montague W. J. Bruce, of Sooke, president of the Associated Boards of Trade, will present a report of the organization's work during the past twelve months, and this will be followed by the establishment by Mr. M. C. Ironside, of Malahat, the secretary-treasurer, of

It was not proper, therefore, to argue about them at this time, it was contended that British Columbia's application to the Privy Council will be along these four distinct lines:

1. Abolition of the mountain differential.
2. Reduction of the export grain rate.
3. Reduction of the domestic grain rate.
4. Complete revision of the various rates covering the shipment of British Columbia fruit to its prairie markets.

Two courses will be open to the Privy Council in dealing with this matter. It may render a decision itself on any or all of these points, or it may refer them to the railway commission with instructions to deal with them. The railway commission was instructed by the Government before to equalize Western rates, but according to the British Columbia contention this order has not been fully implemented. It is on this ground that appeal is being taken.

Turn in Excellent Scores at B.C.R.A. Meeting at Heals

Q.M.S. EVANS WINNER

Quartermaster - Sergt. A. E. "Bailey" Evans, Garrison Rifle Association, carried off the honors in the Lieutenant-Governor's match, the blue ribbon individual shoot, this morning with a total of 243. Four points behind the winner was Staff-Sergt. W. McKay, a colleague, while Sergt.-Major Sammy Watson, 16th Canadian Scottish, and Gunner Hollingworth, Garrison Rifle Association, finished third and fourth respectively. A lone point separated the last three named marksmen.

Quartermaster Evans, with 149, led the scorers in the first stage, while Staff-Sergt. W. McKay, with 141 topped the list at the longer ranges.

The team shooting of the 16th Canadian Scottish stood out like a searchlight on a dark night with the lively brand of scores in the Infantry Association Cup match, St. Charles Challenge Shield match and the Laurie Bagle match, with victories in all three instances.

In the Infantry Association match the Scottish were closely pressed by the Tunnels from Work Point barracks, but in the other two matches their margin of victory was over thirty points.

Captain W. Tapley, 16th Canadian Scottish, Victoria, won the shoot-off held today with Sergt. Roy Davies, for the B.C.R.A. bronze medal in the Macdonald "Brier" match, No. 3, over the 600-yard range.

KEEN COMPETITION

The keenness of the many competitions was reflected in the result of the Grand Aggregate in which only 26 points separated the winner, Major Fred Richardson, O.B.E., C.O.A., Victoria, from Private I. M. Grant, 72nd Seaforth Highlanders, Vancouver, who finished at the tail end of the first twenty.

Sergt. Roy Davies, 72nd Seaforth Highlanders, Vancouver, with a total of 243 for the pistol competition, Q.M.S. I. W. Wood, Garrison Rifle Association, was second with 42.

The Garrison Rifle Association team registered a sweet victory when they won the President's medal with 568 points, fourteen better than the 72nd Seaforth Highlanders, Vancouver, who were second. Fifth C.O.A., Victoria, was third with 542. Today's victory in the president's match marks the first for the Tunnels from Work Point since the trophy was donated.

Pte. Cassidy, Socialists, take the limelight again for team shooting when they won first and second place in the Lewis gun match, Vancouver Regiment was third.

The team shooting of the Canadian Scottish was remarkable. Members of the club within ranks finished in first place in no less than six team competitions, namely the combined B.C. Electric Railway match, Laurie Bagle match, Infantry Association Cup match, Dewar Cup match, St. Charles Challenge Shield match and Lewis Gun match.

The Canadian Scottish team, winning first and second place in the Lewis gun match were as follows: 1. Captain Hansen, Bergsaal Ache and Sergeant Herman; 2. Lieut. A. Fraser, Lieut. C. S. Fraser and Sergt. H. Hemlin.

The Garrison team won the Dewar and President's matches, while the shooting of the Tyro team from the local Garrison, which won for them the Tyro team match and the Oelbbly match, was highly commendable.

SETS NEW RECORD

While it is believed by a few record was set by Major Fred Richardson, O.B.E., Victoria, by compiling the splendid score of 328 in the grand aggregate. The previous high mark, set last year by Lieut.-Col. R. M. Blair, 72nd Seaforth Highlanders, Vancouver, was 325.

In addition to the consistent shooting of Major Richardson, the scores of Q.M.-Sergt. A. E. Evans and Staff-Sergt. W. McKay, of the Garrison Rifle Association, have been the cause of much comment on the ranges. Steady plugging along with practice and perseverance has won Evans the blue ribbon rifle and the meet, while the feat of Staff-Sergeant McKay in winning the Victoria match is one that will take some beating in future meets, particularly when it is known that McKay is a tyro.

Quartermaster-Sergeant Evans had a splendid day on Thursday and is believed to have established a record for consistent shooting in one day. This crack rifle shot only dropped three points in 190 over the following ranges: 200, 500, 600, 800 and 900 yards.

Captain MacNeil, Vancouver, with 24, won the shoot-off for the bronze medal in the Dewar match, Sergeant Caplin, Vancouver, scored 21 in this event, while Sergt. T. Pasmain, Garrison Rifle Association, the third man to the tie retired after his first two shots.

Conditions throughout the meet were generally fair, with an occasional sticky wind the kind of a wind for which Heals Ranges are noted.

PREMIER PRESENTS PRIZES

The meet was brought to a successful close here this afternoon by the presentation of prizes by Hon. S. F. Tolmie. In a few words the Premier congratulated the various marksmen on their individual successes and spoke of the value and rifle shooting as an aid to making better and more energetic citizens. As earlh of the successful marksmen received his prize a friendly hand shake and words of congratulation greeted him from Premier and the Hon. gathered at the scene of the presentation applauded. Following the presentation, three cheers and a tiger rwas yor for the Premier in token of appreciation for the interest shown by him in the rifle shooting game.

MAJOR RICHARDSON IS HEAD

At the meeting of the new council of the British Columbia Rifle Association, Major Fred Richardson was elected president for the next year. Lieutenant-Colonel Leland and Lieut. J. B. Parham, both of Vancouver, were named vice-presidents.

Major Gurner Collings and major F. R. M. Wills were returned to the offices of secretary and treasurer, respectively.

CONSTITUTION TO BE CHANGED BY REALTY MEN

Pacific Northwest Association at Annual Meeting in Salem Will Discuss Vital Matters

REORGANIZATION PLANS OUTLINED

Complete reorganization of the Pacific Northwest Real Estate Association to bring matters concerning the state organizations into greater prominence, will be considered at the annual convention of the association, which will be held in Salem, Oregon, on July 24, 25 and 26, according to President George A. Spencer, of Seattle.

The plan which is being discussed generally by Northwest realtors involves a change in the constitution of the organization under which the president of each state body in British Columbia, Washington, Oregon and Idaho would be a vice-president or director in the Northwest Association.

At present each state or provincial unit has two vice-presidents in the larger association. The plan also involves changing the fiscal year to begin September 1, instead of July 1. This latter move is planned to permit officials of the state organizations to have matters relating to state legislation acted upon by committees prior to the convening of the legislatures.

WINTER MEETINGS

President Spencer's proposals also provide for a Winter meeting of the various state associations instead of the general meeting held by the larger organization.

Summed up, the plan involves the following changes

1. Moving ahead the period of the fiscal year to September 1.

2. Making state presidents directors in the Pacific Northwest Association.

3. Each state organization to have a separate midwinter meeting instead of the Winter meeting of the Pacific Northwest Association.

President Spencer has toured portions of the three states and British Columbia, and reports that the real estate men generally favor the suggested changes as promoting the best interests of the members of the state organizations.

The plan will be explained in detail at the Pacific Northwest Real Estate Association convention this month at Salem, and is expected to be approved.

The Pacific Northwest Association was formed thirteen years ago to bring realtors in closer contact and to give greater protection to the buyer and seller of property as well as to give greater stability to the business.

U.S. RELATIONS WITH VATICAN ARE DISCUSSED

Apostolic Delegate Delivers to President Hoover Copy of Treaty Recognizing Papal Independence

WASHINGTON FINDS PROBLEM DIFFICULT

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The action of President Hoover in receiving Mgr. Pumasioni Biondi, apostolic delegate in the United States, at the White House this week, has revived speculation in official and diplomatic circles regarding the status of American-Vatican relations.

There has been considerable discussion in these circles over the fact that Mgr. Biondi delivered to the President a copy of the Lateran Treaty, recently signed between the Vatican and Italy, in which the latter recognizes the sovereignty of the Papal State.

The visit was described in Cabinet circles here as the customary visit which the delegate pays after the President assumes office.

While the visit itself was emphasized in high administration circles to indicate no intention of recognition of the Vatican by the United States, it was said at the United States State Department that there is no doubt that the United States is now officially aware of the existence of the sovereignty of the Vatican as ruler of an independent state.

Heretofore the Washington Government has been extremely cautious in avoiding diplomatic incidents which might lead to intimations of recognition of a state which the United States did not desire to recognize.

PUGET SOUNDERS DISCUSS PROJECT

Meeting of Publicity Men in Seattle Discusses Huge International Advertising Scheme

Mr. David Leeming president of the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau, and Publicity Commissioner George I. Warren were Victoria's representatives in Seattle on Friday, at a meeting when the Puget Sounders and British Columbians' Association discussed the possibility of a nationwide advertising campaign throughout the United States.

This campaign, it is understood, will provide for advertising in national publications, as well as in local newspapers. It is understood that the central portion of the United States, which centres around Chicago, should be given special attention.

At the meeting a committee was formed to consider the means for raising funds to prosecute the campaign, which offers a far wider scope for publicity work than any before dreamed of. Mr. Frederick Green, the president of the association, presided over the meeting, at which a number of satisfactory reports of the activities of the association were given.

WILL EXTEND COLD STORAGE FACILITIES

Federal Government Makes Grant for Improving Refrigerator Service at Vernon

The Department of Agriculture of the Federal Government has made a grant of $7,000 towards the extension of cold storage facilities at the Vernon Fruit Union plant. This recognition by the Federal Government of cold storage as the logical solution of many fruit problems, and their grant towards such extension, it is announced will work a double benefit to the industry.

This grant will enable the Union to more than double its present storage capacity, bringing it up to a total of 70,000 boxes, which means the conversion of 112 feet of the present common storage basement into one hundred refrigerator chamber, and this is being carried out in conjunction with the installation of the necessary conveyors for the efficient handling and discharging of fruit stored.

The Union's present building and basement is considered a fine one, being in fine condition; therefore the installation of refrigeration chambers in the basement is not as costly here as it would be in buildings of poorer construction.

In coming more and more to be recognized that the cold storing of fruit is an essential development of the marketing of various varieties. In the Pacific States it is recognized as a standard way of solving the situation and cold storage units are being constantly added to those now in use.

Some years ago Washington believed people in storing their fruits at point of consumption. This idea has been completely exploded, according to well informed growers, and now the whole state is solidly behind the principle of storing at point of origin. British Columbia is following suit, the Co-operative Association having just completed a 90,000-box cold storage and precooling and loading unit and the Okanagan Growers' Exchange have completed a plant with a capacity of 100,000 boxes. Now Vernon will have a plant with a capacity of 70,000 boxes.

The McIntosh Red is one apple which lends itself particularly to cold storage. Handled at its best it must be twenty-four hours from the tree into cold storage chambers. It is a tender boy in splendid condition for a long time, and should enable operators to make the most of the market for this splendid variety, which reaches its greatest perfection in the northern half of the Okanagan Valley. The McIntosh should be treated like the Winesap in the matter of storing.

The Vernon Fruit Union's present cold storage plant consists of two 12-ton Linde vertical twin-cylinder enclosed type ammonia compressor, together with a twenty horsepower motor to operate same, and one eighteen-ton Linde vertical twin-cylinder enclosed type ammonia compressor, together with a twenty-five horsepower motor. These serve two precooling chambers, each fifty by eighty feet, with a capacity of [illegible] each or a total of 10,000 boxes.

The machinery to serve a precooling chamber is necessarily much more powerful than the machinery necessary for ordinary cold storage and these two compressors are able to handle 5,000 boxes of fruit in and out each as where precooling is desired. For ordinary refrigeration purposes however, these machines can handle up to 100,000 boxes in cold storage.

SCHEDULE HAS SMALL CHANGE

Arrangements Are Announced for Broadcasting From Summer School

In announcing full details of this week's broadcasting events from the Department of Education's Summer School, the Victoria Broadcasting Association, owners of CFCT, stated that a slight change of schedule has been found desirable for the first four days of this week. The series of lectures from Monday to Thursday will be moved an hour and a quarter later, taking place at 3.15 instead of 2 o'clock. Friday afternoon's broadcast, however, will take place at the hour originally arranged.

During the first week of the Summer school, Miss Mable Rich, superior of the Education Department of the Victor Talking Machine Company, of Montreal, will be heard over Victoria's radio station in a group of lectures on "The Appreciation of Music." Tomorrow afternoon at 3.15 o'clock she will be dealt with, and on Tuesday "The Symphony Orchestra and Its Instruments" will be under discussion. On Wednesday afternoon Miss Rich's lecture will concern the interesting topic of "Boat Songs From Many Lands," while Thursday's broadcast will consist of an appreciation of Verdi's "Troviatore." These four lectures will be illustrated with recordings.

Friday's two broadcasts from the summer school will be delightfully entertaining for both will consist of musical programmes. The afternoon radio session will take place at the prize-winning concert and a Rhythmic Band and Toy Symphony Orchestra will be enjoyed over CFCT. At 8 o'clock in the evening the microphones of the local radio station will be installed in the auditorium of the High School and a concert will be presented. This concert will bring to a close the first week of the programme of broadcasts from the Summer School.

Rhodes Scholars Gather in Force; Speech by Prince

OXFORD, Eng., July 6.—A great gathering of scholars from the British Empire, the United States and Germany yesterday assembled in the new Rhodes House to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the famous Rhodes scholarships at Oxford University.

The Prince of Wales, former Rhodes scholar, was present, and many prominent persons were present at a dinner in honor of the occasion last night.

Mr. Baldwin, who is one of the Rhodes trustees, made the important announcement that for the first time since the scholarships were awarded from the scholarships during the war, German scholars again would be admitted to Rhodes scholarships. Many German scholars of prewar days were present, including Doctor Bernstorff, Counsellor of the German Embassy in London.

A great feature of the dinner was the presentation to Rhodes House of two autographed letters of Cecil Rhodes, through the good offices of President Hoover. The presentation was made by Vincent Butler of California, on behalf of the American Rhodes scholars. The letters were written to Cecil Rhodes solicitor, Bourchier Hawkesley, and concerned the foundation of the Rhodes trust.

PRINCE OF WALES

In his toast to the Rhodes scholars, the Prince of Wales said:

"I am delighted to hear the trustees are going to renew German scholarships. We welcome the Germans back most heartily.

Angry Householder (to persistent canvasser): "This is the third time you have called about an electric iron. How many times do you want me to refuse you?"

Salesman: "Well, Madam, I think twice is sufficient."

Sam—Do you refuse to pay me that two dollars I lent you?

Rastus—Oh, no, sah! Ah don't refuse. Ah jes' refrains

NEW CONSTITUTION FOR SPAIN DRAFTED

PARIS, July 6.—The new constitution of Spain, which was presented in the Spanish National Assembly yesterday will come up for plenary action in October, it became known last night in Paris. By this constitution Spain is made a constitutional monarchy with Roman Catholicism as the state religion. The rights of free speech and publication by all Spanish subjects are guaranteed with certain exceptions.

The executive power of the state is vested with the king who however, must consult the responsible ministers on important affairs. The legislative powers will be in a single body called the Cortes.

One half of the Cortes will be elected by universal suffrage, thirty members appointed by royal decree and the rest elected by special classifications to be prescribed in laws later enacted may establish.

There will be one member of the Cortes to each 100,000 inhabitants of Spain. Women as well as men may become members.

THANKSGIVING

Today an Empire will publish with the voice of thanksgiving its gratitude to God for the recovery of His Majesty from the severe illness which laid him low last year-end and which kept him in a state of convalescence for so many months. It is an occasion when a united people can sing a psalm of thanks, and in doing so realize the weight that has been lifted from many minds by relief from the burden of apprehension which so long kept so many peoples beneath its pall. To find a parallel to the occasion of thanksgiving it is necessary to go back to an occasion some seven years ago, when there was a paean of praise to that Providence who watched over the fortunes of the Allied arms in the Great War.

The King is a devout Christian; the head of a Christian people. It is the crowning epitome of the thoughts that must have run through his mind during the time he lay on a bed of suffering that his recovery should be made the subject of thanksgiving. It is his wish that the people are interpreting today. The act contains a great Christian lesson for it is a reminder not to forget all the benefits that are bestowed by the Ruler of all things. It is humanity's tribute to the Power above all others that redeemeth life from destruction; "who crowneth thee with loving kindness and mercy."

Thanksgiving today should be such "as fits a king's remembrance." It should be an admixture of solemnity and joy. Thousands upon thousands of the human race will participate in the services and the chant of praise will ring around the world. It will be the signal that the people who owe allegiance to a Christian Kine have a higher allegiance to the King of Kines who has vouchsafed to them a sign of his infinite mercies in preserving the life of their earthly monarch. The hearts of all who join in thanksgiving today cannot fail to say with the psalmist that, the Lord is good, "His mercy is everlasting; and His truth endureth to all generations."

VICTORIA'S FEDERAL MEMBER

In common with all the Conservative members and the Conservative press throughout the Dominion, Mr. D. B. Plunkett, M.P., who has just returned from Ottawa after his Federal duties, believes that the great issue before the country is what fiscal policy will be pursued in the future. This question has been raised with an added significance because of the increased tariff proposals before the American Congress. The chances are that this process of raising the American tariffs, to the detriment of Canada's trade with the United States, will be approved. The task will then confront Canada both of finding new markets to replace those lost, and, as well, raising her own tariff barriers so that there is a readjustment of her trade on a one-sided condition of our trade with the United States.

Mr. Mackenzie King's policy of "watchful waiting" does not appeal to the Conservatives of the Dominion. There are many Liberals who regard the supine attitude of the Federal Government with misgivings, and even in the Prairie Provinces there is a tide of public sentiment running against the course being pursued at Ottawa. It is regarded as too subservient to the United States, a subservience which is militating against Canada's economic progress. The whole trend of events suggests that when a general election is held next year the outstanding issue will be the fiscal policy and the steps to be taken to meet the repeated raising of the American tariff barriers against the products of this country.

Mr. Plunkett has given an admirable resume of the course of events at the last session of Parliament. He was an active member himself, despite bad health which he experienced for a considerable period of his stay in Ottawa. When ever he spoke he had something pertinent to say, something of value to his constituents, and he said it in straight-from-language backed up by facts and figures. The criticism he made of the postal conditions that prevail here, through postal employees being overworked, has aroused the sympathetic consideration of the Postmaster-General. There is to be an investigation, with the promise that relief will be forthcoming. Mr. Plunkett also drew the attention of Parliament to the handicap being experienced by the local woolen mill because of the Government's policy regarding the duty on woolen rags. While nothing has been done for relief the question has been aired and Parliament has been apprised of local conditions.

Mr. Plunkett's attitude, and the attitude of the entire Conservative Party of the Dominion, towards the Soldiers' Salient Preference Treaty, is well known. It is opposition to the approval of that treaty as it is now drawn. The Conservatives realize that something should be done by international sanction for the conservation of the sockeye salmon supply, but they are not aware why there should be joint American and Canadian control of the waters of the Fraser River, a waterbed which is entirely Canadian, and which Canadians are quite competent to administer themselves. They point out, with logic entirely on their side, that the Americans would never give the people of this country a similar measure of joint control of any resources in the United States. As a result of the significance of Conservative opposition to this Treaty ratification of it by Parliament is in question. This is an action which is approved by British Columbia. It was only when the Treaty was being examined by a parliamentary committee that the full significance of its implications became known to the people of this province and of Canada. It is a Treaty which is strictly speaking, a matter for Canadian judgment. National as well as provincial rights are involved and there is no question whatever that Mr. Plunkett's attitude and that of his fellow Conservatives at Ottawa will appeal strongly to his constituents in Victoria.

Mr. Plunkett deserves the hearty congratulations of the people of Victoria on the manner in which he has comported himself during his first session at Ottawa. He has proved a useful, active and well-balance member of Parliament. He has studied every question that has arisen on its merits, and, indeed, in the matter of study, he has shown his realization that every member of Parliament, no matter how well informed, begins an apprenticeship when entering the House of Commons. Plunkett has acquitted himself into the troubled waters of political strife with enthusiasm, but at the same time with restraint, and he has earned encomiums from members on both side of the House for the fairness which has governed his discussion of public affairs. Victoria has found in him an asset as a member. There is no question whatever that this constituency is being admirably represented at Ottawa. Mr. Plunkett, in addition to a habit of clear thinking, has brought to bear upon his duties intense application. He has evidenced ability to go on increasing his knowledge all the time That is the type of man who invariably makes good in any legislative assembly.

BISHOP O'DONNELL'S DEPARTURE

The translation and elevation of Bishop Thomas O'Donnell from this bishopric is one which will be regretted by all adherents of the Roman Catholic Church in the community and by many others who, because his priest has become well known and highly respected. He was an administrator of considerable tact and ability. He was active in the parish in which his office called upon him to perform. He had earned the faith and trust of all his congregation at St. Andrew's and of that wider congregation within the confines of his bishopric. His abilities were such that he was marked out for promotion and while it Victoria is loss it is gain to Halifax, where he goes as Bishop-Coadjutor.

During the five years of his bishopric in Victoria and his administration of Vancouver Island he made many friends who will keenly miss his presence. He has left the church of which he is an ornament in better shape than he found it in this diocese. He has shown excellent business ability in the handling of the church affairs, respected by many, as well as those of his own faith. The best wishes of all Victorians will go with him in his new sphere in which he is marked out for further promotion.

O Sovereign God! Most kind! Compassionate! Our humble gratitude we bring to Thee!

Who hath our King restored, hath tenderly Watched over him! Hath his sickness Thy mercy crave. Now, our faith in Thee! Participate

In Thee, our lives and King, in hope and awe!

In Thy kind grace, long may our King and Queen dwell!

BRITISH JUSTICE

A noteworthy incident has just taken place in England which demonstrates just how far the British magistracy go in interpreting the law rigorously. A man was brought before the court on a charge of manslaughter. The police, at the beginning of the affair, questioned a boy of 13 years old at the request of the defence, legally handed over their names and addresses" Rule, in such cases, is that another person appeared who had been known for some time to the police, a witness who was able to give evidence favorable to the defence, but of whom they knew nothing. The police declined, however, to trade at all with to reveal the existence of the witness if the lawyers for the defence had asked questions. The case, however, was set aside, and reproached the officers for not having kept the defence informed. Before the British tribunal a trial is not a duel in which each party tries to win by the use of every trick. The object of a trial is to determine fully whether or not an accused is guilty and, if it is shown that the defence does not intend to bring the witness forward to testify, the prosecution, on its part, is rigorously bound to let him go free under daylight all the facts, favorable or unfavorable to the accused.—La Presse.

O SUMMER SUN, O MOVING TREES!

O Summer sun, O moving trees!
O cheerful human noise, O busy glittering street!
What hour shall Fate in all the future find
Or what disliking, ever to equal these
Only to cease the warmth, the light, the wind,
Only to be silent and feel that life's sweet?

—Lawrence Binyon.

Note and Comment

By R. B. D.

Now that all men and women are politically free and equal, everybody should be interested in politics and everybody should carefully study current political history. Until the women were given votes and the right or the privilege as the case may be to sit in Parliament or in Legislature, they could not be expected to be interested in politics or to devote any part of their valuable time to making notes about the ways and the wiles of politicians. Now the conditions are different, and the dear ladies should adjust themselves mentally to the existing conditions. For we can assure them that politics is neither an exact science nor a dry-as-dust subject of study.

* * *

There are many serious and important as well as many entertaining features in almost every political situation. Tragedy and even comedies of tragedy in some political situations. The political situation in the Old Land is at present chiefly humorous, but it may develop into a tragical political situation. The spectacle of Lord Beaverbrook, of Park-lold's Corners, discarding the overalls of a laborer and donning the robes of a Lord and with a coronet of a Peer of the Realm chasing his noble hive taking his seat in the House of Lords may occasion considerable laughter and some jeers, but there is a serious side to this spectacle nevertheless. It signifies the passing of an old and not a completely dishonorable order. Its significance may be deeper than that. It is true the Lord of Parsnipfields Corners never was a laborer and never, so far as we know, did a day's physical labor in his life, but that circumstance does not alter a suppositious case.

* * *

There has been a great deal of comment by foreign commentators on the "political revolution in Ricardland." Needless to say, there is neither shedding of tears nor any outward expression of sorrow upon the interesting subject. On the contrary, news of the downfall of the Conservative Government and the advent of a Labor or Socialist administration was hailed with joyful acclamation, not because a change of government was considered a good thing for Britain, but because it portended the decline and the ultimate fall of the British Empire. The hate was nursed for centuries had played a dominant part in the affairs of the world was going the way of all other empire organizations. It was still too powerful to fear attack from without, but it was suffering from internal disorder, and that is a malady which is always fatal.

* * *

The political situation in Canada may not be so portentous or ominous possibilities as the political situation in Great Britain, but still it is not without interest to the students of political events. That political situation has been curiously upset by both the political situation in Great Britain and the political situation in the United States. For a number of years the political situation in Canada has been exceedingly complex. There was a time when was called the old-party lines has been relaxed. The Conservative Party has not been as powerful as expected by political disaffection as the Liberal Party, except in the Prairie Provinces. Progressive Parties and Farmers' Parties were organized out of disaffected Liberal elements. The Farmers' Government of Ontario of unsavory memory, which lived for one short inglorious term, was formed and led by Liberals. The Gardner Government of Saskatchewan, which has been delusively defeated, but definitely demonstrated that it will not get out until it is kicked out, was developed from seeds of Liberalism grown under glass. The composite Government of Manitoba has fallen into disrepute and its days are numbered.

All these Governments as well as the Government at Ottawa derived all the political vitality their possession from professions of faith, in the possibility of securing access to the markets of the United States. That faith has received a death blow from the President and Congress of the United States, and the Governments which professed the faith are staggering from the effects of the blow. The Ottawa Government has been dealt an even more staggering blow than the others in the head it received from the United States. The Tacherean Government of Quebec, which is a Liberal Government, is another which has notified the King Government that the lumber, cattle, fruit and vegetable producers of that province will be rained unless they are given some form of protection from the competition of the products of the United States.

* * *

Then there is another interesting political situation in Canada, which is based entirely upon the recent political developments in the United States and Great Britain. A few months ago there was not a Liberal newspaper in Canada, with possibly the exception of one, whose was not shouting for Canadian independence and for a tariff which would be representative of Canada's independence. In fact, some of the Liberal newspapers were as revolutionary in their political views as their kindred in Russia. Today all the Liberal newspapers are rushing pell-mell into the old political fold. There are demanding closer trade relations with the Motherland. Great Land, but at the same time they are insisting that no protective measures shall be taken against the products of the country which is demanding free entry and selling all Canadian products except the raw materials required for manufacturing purposes free to markets. Never in the history of Canada has there been such an interesting political situation.

BONNET

I am in love with Summer and the sun
And all this shining round of golden days
And sapphire nights of which the weeks are spun,
With all the variety of wistful ways.
Now I can gaze through beauty's rainbow glass,
With wind eyes can seek each item of her face.
The arabesques of shadow on the grass,
The lacy robes the waving willows lace,
And memory will gather all this
Of pleasant fields, this green of trees
Help and cool me when I return
To can again when Winter nights are cold
And sullen rain is dripping from the eaves.
So when life's Winter comes with chill and gloom,
Men warm their hearts in memories with youth's remembered bloom.

"DUNROVIN"

Sir,—I really must protest the name you have given my domicile in last Sunday's issue, "Dunrovin," making it look like the home of a modern Rajpot or of a United bandit!

The proper appellation is "Dunrovin," the refuge of a rolling stone.

MR. PATTULO'S CRITICISM

Sir,—In the issue of The Times of June 29 appeared Mr. Pattulo, the Leader of the Provincial Opposition, and a fierce Jeremiah Tulmer address to the pioneers of the Coquitlam district. Mr. Pattulo, at the instant, on the ground that it was Dominion Day, did not "indulge in cry of partisanship."

"Partisanship" has been used so often by the Leader of the Opposition that the Government was swept out of power, and on this occasion it was grounds which are contrary to the facts, that one could think that he had in it a bit of propaganda intended to cover the House of a more serious nature which may come up later on. Mr. Pattulo has been happy and serious for some time now, and I do not suppose his condition is likely to be improved in time passes. What he needs is a long rest cure, probably was what, the electors of British Columbia intended when they gave the Liberal administration out of power at the last election.

Dominion Day is a day set aside as a national holiday to commemorate Confederation, and is the day that people spend in peace.

The Saanich Conservative Association, Saanich, Victoria, held a picnic on Dominion Day for some years past and as has been the custom the Federal and Provincial representatives, if they can conveniently, as well as other members of the House generally, have been invited. Although held under the auspices of the Saanich Conservative Association, it was open to all, and Liberals of the Saanich Liberal Association were as welcome as anyone else. It was a matter of fact there were a number of well-known Liberals present. Three instrumental statesmen in the Old Country, the Premier of Canada, of the British Commonwealth have on occasions, when they have had an opportunity of meeting the general public, addressed the public on questions affecting the country.

True to his promise that when elected he would look after the welfare of the province as a whole, Mr. Pattulo, in his remarks to his agricultural constituency by telling them what he had accomplished, doing and proposes to do to help them in offering some of their produce. He assured them of a definite policy which is being worked out. It will be recalled that a Liberal Premier, when addressing a meeting of farmers in Metchosin some years ago, told them that he knew farming did not pay, but could offer them no hope of help or assistance, merely offering as his opinion that this lack of profit in farming was due "to the greed of capital and labor." Contrast this with Dr. Tolmie's very definite assurance of help and care and contrast Mr. Pattullo's desire to minimize the criticism of the farmers who heard Dr. Tolmie.

In the interest, accuracy, surely Mr. Pattullo is the last man who should criticize, and it is very true that there is accuracy, which there is not. Has Mr. Pattullo forgotten the suppressed Rose Napier report into the Pacific Great Eastern Railway administration, which cost one Liberal Premier his job, and suppressed That report was absolutely suppressed. Has Mr. Pattullo forgotten the refusal of the MacLean Government, of which he was a member, to either publish the correspondence regarding the alleged intention of the Canadian Northern Railway to buy the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, or even to show it to the Leader of the Opposition, to have a confidential look at it then?

DO ATHLETICS PAY?

Sir,—The best answer to this question is simply to point to the many hundreds of athletes of both sexes who are now in sports of many kinds, such as soccer and Rugby football, cricket, lacrosse, baseball, track and field athletics, golf, tennis, bowling, swimming, basketball, boxing, etc.

We have in Victoria athletes of both sexes capable of competing favorably in any company, and who deservedly should be supported and cared for.

We lack a strong athletic association to train and develop our young athletes. Our business and business should be to provide facilities to bring about healthy contact and competition with the young people of other places and countries.

May I here bear testimony to the excellent, I may fairly say grand work done by our local Y.M.C.A. which has trained and developed many of our athletic youth.

Such athletes as lacrosse, Shillings, Connover, Spall, Mitchell, Humber, Fielding, the Davis brothers and many others, including ladies, have won honor for province and channeling to develop into stars that would contribute to put Victoria on the map as nothing else can do.

Such training should begin at an early age, and the Victoria School Board is to be highly commended for sponsoring and taking care of H. O. Litchfield while a member of the board, who was cut down in his prime and may be seen in almost every athletic gathering.

I should like to bear similar testimony to the Victoria Parks Board, in operation of Messrs. Adam, Dwyer and Hallett, and the City Council, who have rendered every assistance possible to smooth the way of both young and old, and I agree with Mr. Winfield grounds under their control, and, as a matter of fact, I am delighted with Alderman Worthington's proposal to convert Topaz Avenue Park, which I hope to see developed into a more suitable and appealing name.

I understand that there is at least one more scheme that, if carried out, may be more beneficial, and also leave Topaz Avenue Park for park purposes, and it would be required for playgrounds by Victoria's young men and young women of expansion.

He was a kindly, fine old gentleman,
And full of noble, natural gallantry.
With ever-thoughtful generosity imbued!
Through life's path straight and true, living all virtues
And more with heartfelt, genuine charity!
For a true and purposeful integrity!
How hath he joined the last great Harvest
Of his companions, most had gone before

Lay his head, gently down to rest, nor mourn

Jots From History

THEODORE Roosevelt, the twenty-sixth President of the United States and one of the most versatile men to hold that office, was born in New York City in 1858. His parents were wealthy, and so a young man he had every possible advantage except that of robust health. He was educated at Harvard and later entered the field of politics. The death of his mother and his wife in the same year caused him to lose interest in public life and he took up ranching. He returned to public life, however, and was finally elected vice president and upon McKinley's assassination became President and was re-elected to office. He died in 1919.

FUMES FROM SMELTER PROVE VERY COSTLY

OLYMPIA, Wash., July 6—The Consolidated Mining & Smelting Company at Trail, B.C., will erect a $1,000,000 plant to render fumes from the works harmless to state timber and other United States property in the northern part of Stevens County, Lieut.-Governor Homer Clark V. Savidge, who has just returned from conferring with the United States members of the International Joint Commission here in Washington, D.C., said today.

"As soon as the first unit of the plant is completed a second will be started and another and so on until the same amount.

"Since it will be five years before the work of the company's experiment can be definitely determined, the commission is willing to grant awards for damages to date, if claimants so desire, such awards for damages not to prejudice future or final settlement, the land commissioner said.

WELL-KNOWN HERD

Ayrshire Germanyers Will Come to Fair From Mr. Forbes' Farm at Cobble Hill

Announcement was made yesterday by Mr. W. H. Morris, secretary of the Provincial Fair Board, that an entry of the famous Ayrshire Germanyers owned by Alister Forbes of the Hill Farm, Cobble Hill will be shown at the exhibition opening at the Willows, August 19.

Mr. Forbes' herd numbers about 50 head. It was established in 1921 and additions have been made from time to time of the best Germanyer blood available. Practically all the animals carry May Rose blood and the herd sire is Crimson Wonder of the Ranch, a son of Brookfield's famous "White Face." He is rated a class A.A. bull by the Dairy Cattle Committee and his dated daughters are now getting into his dairy in the Canadian Record of Performance Test. The herd's sire, Crimson Wonder of the Ranch, is now a record transmitting sire of the Guernsey breed because his daughters increased the records of their dams to greater extent than the daughters of any other bull.

Entries from the Hill Farm were a feature of many shows in Western Canada last year, and altogether 107 ribbons were won. Applications for entry forms for all sections of the show received daily by Mr. Morris provide a guarantee that every section of the show will again be crowded this year. The greatest trouble the officials again face is not in securing entries but in providing space to accommodate the entries received. As previously announced the demand for exhibition space in the buildings through which thousands of people pass daily during fair week has exceeded the amount available years ago.

The decision to bring to Victoria a big outstanding attraction for the fair this year has drawn many favorable comments. The attraction is in addition to the many sideway features that will be brought here by the Browning Amusement Company, located on the Wofter Garden Space which brings to Victoria some of the finest, most attractive and most centiment in an elaborate setting in a specially constructed theatre.

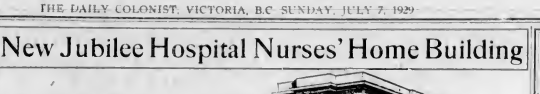
New Jubilee Hospital Nurses' Home Building



THIS structure, which will make such a handsome addition to the Royal Jubilee Hospital group of buildings, should be completed and ready for occupation some time in November. Quite apart from the pressing accommodation, it is much more than a new nurses' home. The new building will be welcomed because of the additional accommodation it will afford in the hospital by releasing the Strathcona Wing, now occupied by the probationers, as wards and semi-private rooms. Something like sixty-five additional beds will be added to the Jubilee as the result of this.

The new Nurses' Home fronts on Richmond Avenue. H-shaped, it will be three stories high, with basement, and will have a 200-foot frontage, with maximum width of 121 feet in the wings and a 40-foot width in the bridge part of the H.

The total cost will be $150,000.

The ground floor will comprise a 16 x 20-foot reception-room, in the centre, the matron's office, the library, living-rooms, 31.8 x 68 feet (which can be divided into two by means of sliding doors), looking south wing, twenty private rooms for superviseers, together with sitting-room and lavatory and bathroom accommodation; in the north wing, double bedrooms and the rooms for the director of nursing.

The two upper floors will be entirely given up to single and double cold water in every room, with sitting or study-rooms.

The basement floor will contain the laundry, also (although these will be left unfinished for the present), nurses' classrooms.

As completed in November, the new home will accommodate about 160 nurses, but this does not take into consideration the finishing of the top floor, which will increase the accommodation to about 220. An additional expenditure of about $40,000 is represented in this, however, so the work is being suspended until the space is more urgently needed.

The structure is assuming suitable proportions, and it can be seen that the walls are of pressed Clayburn brick. The corridors are all to be of solid mill construction, stairways of reinforced concrete enclosed with brick walls. All corridors will be finished with composition flooring with plaster walls.

Plumbing is being fitted throughout to allow of supply of hot and cold water in every room. The floor showers and tub baths will be fitted in the bathrooms. Steam heating is being fitted throughout, the supply coming from the main power house in the hospital.

One of the special attractions of the building is the provision made of fresh air and light in all rooms. There is not an inside room in the building. The appearance of the structure is enhanced by the large balcony over the front entrance and concrete balconies on each end. These latter are connected with the fire escapes.

Double rooms measure 10 x 16 feet, with two clothes closets in each; single rooms, which contain one clothes closet, measure 6 x 16 feet. The main corridors on each floor (running north and south) are 8 feet in width, the short east-west corridors in the wings 6 feet. The entrance reception-rooms are being fitted with sliding doors in such a way that they can be opened up to make a big reception-room.

Mr. C. Elwood Watkins is architect for the new building, and Messrs. Loney Bros. have the contract for all work except the plumbing and heating, which is being done by Messrs. W. R. Menzies & Co.

The main entrance stands back about 50 feet from Richmond Avenue, and it is the intention eventually to beautify the front space with flowers and shrubs, as the excavated material will be used to level up the grounds.

PRAIRIE CROP IS IN URGENT NEED OF RAIN

Some Districts in Each Province Report Farmers Ploughing Up Fields Sown—Drought Severe

IMPAIRMENT OF YIELD GENERAL

WINNIPEG, Man., July 6.—Reports covering the Western Canadian crop for the past week are not encouraging. The general need of rain throughout the Prairie provinces becomes more urgent each day even if the present less than average crop prospect is to be maintained according to the tenth weekly crop report of the Canadian National Railways. Scattered rains, varying in intensity, have occurred, chiefly in Northern Alberta and Saskatchewan, and heavy showers on June 8 have further improved conditions in Northeastern Alberta and Northern Saskatchewan.

Many points in central and southern sections, both in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, are now endeavoring to estimate the extent of the drought damage, the figures in this respect ranging from 20 to 40 per cent loss. Frequent reports of ploughing down crops on Fall ploughing or stubbled in, have also come from these areas.

Northern Alberta received good rains, but previous conditions had already seriously impaired crop prospects. Even if improved conditions continue it is now feared that the hoped for is half a crop.

Central Alberta reports an urgent need of rain. Ploughing down of crop is reported from several districts.

MR. N. CHAMBERLAIN ADVOCATES POLICY OF TARIFF REFORM

By NORBERT BAILEY
(British United Press)

LONDON, July 6.—Neville Chamberlain's tariff reform declaration has caused a great stir throughout the Conservative party, but The Daily News today warns the Tories that if they accept the hopeless slogan of protection they will remain out of office for a generation.

"All parties are now Imperialists in the truest sense of the word," says The News, "and there are better ways of helping the Empire than by bribing it and by impoverishing our own people."

The paper emphasizes that three the Tories have invited disaster by going to the country on the protectionist issue, and adds that an Imperial system of tariffs must necessarily mean an import duty on wheat, which the public would never endorse.

Lieut.-Governor Is Home From Northern Tour

After a prolonged tour of the northern part of the province His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor returned to the Capital yesterday. Hon. R. Randolph Bruce, while occupying the position of the representative of the King, has been exceedingly active in visiting the different parts of British Columbia.

In this connection his honor has shown a disposition to seek out the less frequented visited areas in the province, a fact keenly appreciated by the people resident in these outlying sections of the country.

On this latest trip he went into Atlin, and also to the Stikine area, which have never before been visited by a lieutenant-governor while in office. His Honor was intensely interested in these sections of the country as well as the other parts, which came under his observation on the tour. He visited the Premier mine, and on Dominion Day participated in the festivities which took place in honor of the day at Stewart.

CREATION OF ISLAND BODY IS DEFERRED

would be charged with the furthering of matters relative to a third party on Vancouver Island alone, this is impossible. To get such an organization of the Island so that it would at the next election be entered completely in the interest of the Conservative cause.

There should be no antagonism between the provincial or any other body, and the new one. It is hoped Mach had the work to do and under the various organizations that already existed there was no friction. There should be none in connection with such a body as suggested. There would be no interference with the functions of the provincial association.

DIFFICULT TO FUNCTION

Senator Pariza was of the opinion that it would be difficult to get such an organization to function, even if it were formed. It was difficult to get the existing organizations to meet and carry on the proper work belonging to them. The multiplicity of organizations did not always make for efficiency.

Mr. J. H. Beatty, M.P.P., alluded the danger that it might be thought that Victoria was trying to control the organization were it formed on the ground that the city would have the largest representation. This was frankly admitted to be a difficulty, that some of the other provincial associations feared that the Northern end of Vancouver Island under such an organization would not get fair support with its proposals, owing to the Southern end of the Island controlling the situation.

Mr. Reginald Hayward, M.P.P., said that he did not think there was any danger of the southern end of the Island trying to "put any thing over" the northern end.

The view of a number of the delegates was that if such an organization were formed its main function should be to act unitedly in dealing with questions affecting the Island particularly.

TO STUDY SITUATION

The character of the suggested organization will be studied during the time of the adjournment, so that when the delegates again meet it will be possible to decide exactly the scope of the body, should it be deemed wise to organize, or failing to reach such a decision, to allow the proposition to drop.

The advisability of consulting with General A. D. McRae, the Liberal organizer of the party, before any action was taken, was suggested by Senator Pariza. The greatest spirit of unanimity prevailed throughout the meeting.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. John Bennett, of Nanaimo. There were forty-eight accredited delegates present in person or by proxy, representing all the Provincial associations on the Island except Cowichan-Newcastle, which did not send delegates.

These were made up of nineteen from Victoria, five each from Esquimalt, Saanich, Nanaimo, Alberni and Comox, and four from The Islands. There were present also by virtue of their positions: Senator A. E. Pariza; Mr. C. H. Dickie, M.P.; Colonel C. W. Peck V.C., M.P.P.; Mr. Reginald Hayward, M.P.P.; Mr. C. F. Davie, M.P.P.; Mr. J. H. Beatty, M.P.P., and Messrs. Percy Rushton and Victor B. Harrison, who had been unsuccessful Conservative candidates.

Puzzle for American Boys—Patriotic societies like the Native Sons of Canada have an opportunity for useful work in such a case as a young Scout from this district has disclosed it is reported to The Colonist. R. Foster, of Colquitz, who is Summerside in the American Boy Scouts' camp at Wenatchee, has asked the Canadian Consulate in the party insisted on hoisting the Union Jack and singing "Maple Leaf" on Dominion Day and then they offered a prize to the boy who knew why Canada observed Dominion Day. Now he wants to know why Canada separated from England (!), and why is the anniversary of the foundation of the Boy Scout movement, some that it was Baden Powell's birthday, and other reasons too numerous to mention.

MINING DISCUSSED

Mining activity in British Columbia has aroused the favorable comments of Mr. Hall. He declined to discuss the recent transaction whereby the Consolidated Mining & Smelting Company acquired the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway, western terminus of which is Stewart in the head of the Portland Canal.

In coming through the prairie provinces, Mr. Hall said he was struck by the building operations he observed, also that citizens were beautifying their homes and their cities as they built. The town-planning system was being widely adopted by municipalities. He found that the planting of trees and the proving of parks and boulevards were helping to make cities in the interior of Canada most attractive.

B.C. LUMBER USED

Referring to the building programme everywhere noticed, reference was made to the increasing quantities of British Columbia lumber used in the building industry. Cedar, fir and western hemlock from British Columbia were becoming increasingly popular as a building material and Mr Hall said he was glad to see the use of the domestic market for British Columbia lumber would absorb the output of British Columbia mills.

Referring to the company's timber holdings on Vancouver Island, Mr. Hall said that a policy of conservation was being followed there because of the certainty that the future years would see a dearth of timber even in British Columbia, unless careful methods of forestry were followed.

When it was intimated to Mr. Hall that British Columbia people were anxious to know of any plans regarding a Coast connection with the Peace River, he said there was nothing to say on this point. He said a survey of the country tributary to the Pacific Great Eastern Railway was being carried out jointly by the Canadian National Government of British Columbia, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and until this had been completed there would be nothing decided upon by those interested.

MEETS PREMIER

During the morning Mr. Hall, with Mr. Coleman, met Premier Tolmie at his office in the Parliament Buildings and discussed various matters.

Mr. Hall and Mr. Coleman are expected to lunch with E. H. Martin, president of The Manitoba Free Press of Winnipeg, Messrs. William Bourne and Ernest Grist, of New York.

QUIET REIGNS IN STIKINE DISTRICT

Telegraph Creek Is Stirred From Lethargy When Trapping Starts

Telegraph Creek is still a frontier town, with seasonal activities when the trapping season reaches its peak according to Mr. W. J. McNamara, who is registered at the Strathcona Hotel.

A number of mining men interested in hydraulic concessions in the Dease Lake and River, and Mudcake Creek area near Telegraph Creek as a base, and it is still an outfitting centre for the big prospecting expeditions into the interior, as well as a supply depot for men on the overland telegraph to the Yukon, but the place is quiet, Mr. McNamara says.

There are only a few whole people there the bulk of the population being Indians and half-breeds. Interested personally in merchandising, he says the supplies have to be moved in as a favorable season and Winter communication is distinctly irregular.

The district would see a great improvement if mining again became active in the Cassiar and if the aboriginals showed more industry, he thinks.

An old setor-manager died or at least his relatives thought he had died, and arrangements were made for the funeral.

On the appointed day one of his old colleagues arrived to pay his last respects, but to his astonishment, the would-be mourner was informed that "deceased had come to life after a period of coma.

"Just like Bill," said the mourner. "He was always a larrup for resurrections."

Every Child Deserves This Priceless Opportunity

THE ability to play the piano is a social asset of first importance—and an unfailing source of happiness throughout all life. Every child deserves the privilege of a piano education.

The Sacrifice Is So Little

A piano of prestige, reputation and quality is so easy to purchase—so easy to pay for. For example we have in our showrooms today instruments by Steinway, Heintzman & Co., Mason & Risch and Nordheimer, all of them in a condition as good as new but at about one-half their original cost. The Nordheimer is a beauty . . . a de luxe model upright in mahogany case with that rich, sweet tone which is distinctly a Nordheimer creation. Cost new $750. You can purchase it for $375 on the very easiest of terms.

New Tires Must Be Invented for High Speed Cars

(British United Press)

LONDON July 6—Plans may yet see speed cars tearing past them at the rate of 200 miles an hour in the opinion of England's "Racing Earl," Lord Cottenham.

But the Earl claims that not until a new type of tire is invented, one which will withstand the hardships of such high speed, will a 300-mile clip be possible, and at the same time safe. But "be double it a greater speed can be attained, at least for many years to come.

"I say this" he explains, "in the belief that, regardless of other factors that might prevent such speed from being exceeded, no tire has yet been manufactured which would be likely to withstand the wear and tear of anything above 200 miles an hour."

A deputation of farmers met an up-country divisional council and complained of the bad state of a certain road. The chairman remarked: "But, you see, the road is fairly good, as a whole."

"Yes, indeed it is," replied the spokesman of the party, "but we want to use it as a road."

Adventures in Shoe Chic

ALONG with many fashions and theories and customs of present days, all-linen shoes seasons ago departed for the land of oblivion.

They are back in the sartorial cycle, but are well heeled and tipped off with leather to endure the stress of the mode.

Stunning in its contrast, the linen-leather shoe merger has merited the mark of approval it has won in fashion circles now basking in warm climates.

Brown calfskin combined with natural linen reaches the summit of effectiveness with the white or bright floral costume that is offset by a copper-tinted complexion accomplished via the route of the sun bath or the art of skilled make-up.

Shoes seems never to allow anyone leather to have a clear field and it, too, exacts a role in dressing up the linen shoe.

A canny designer theorizing on the charm of slender lines for the foot and a striking contrast as well, has created linen-leather models as sketched, the pump if you like or the enhancing strap.

Fashion Fancies

By Marie Belmont

The evening dress of sheer black is indispensable of all seasons and dresses of vivid blue supply its most effective background. Black velvet dress must be exceedingly well cut and the wearer should possess a good figure to properly carry it off.

The above dress would be ideal for a formal function. It is of black pressed net over a taffeta slip of black. Large black taffeta poppies decorate the full skirt and accentuate its lines. The sash-back decoration is a new and important note for evening frocks, stressed by the important dressmakers.

Wedding Takes Place In Vancouver

VANCOUVER, July 6. — Rev. Canon H. R. Sovereign, rector of St. Marks, and Rev. C. C. Owen, officiated this afternoon at the marriage of Winnifred Myrtle, youngest daughter of Mrs. J. Z. Hall and the late Mr. J. Z. Hall, of "Killarney," Point Grey Road, and Mr. Frederick George Fulcher, elder son of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Fulcher, of Angus Avenue. The bride is also a granddaughter of the late Samuel Greer, whose name is associated with the early history of Vancouver as the original owner of Greer's Beach, or what is now known as Kitsilano Beach.

Mirror taffeta composed the bridal gown, its bodice displayed skirt showing a deeper flounce of rare old lace just lapping ankle length at the back, the frills circling the skirt three-quarter fashion with a flare panel at the front coming to a point at the waistline. Shirring tracing out the point was studded with pearls and brilliants, and had small clusters of orange blossoms and buds at either side. The slightly hooped skirt and beaux effect at the back emphasized its graceful lines, and the sleeves of taffeta were long and tight-fitting. This was worn with a rope of pearls and a veil of exquisite Carrickmacross lace, a family heirloom, formed a long train from folds of the lace across her head. The veil was held by orange blossoms which circled her veil at the back and finished in clusters at the side, and she carried Ophelia rosebuds showered with orange blossoms.

Miss Marjorie Bell and Miss Jean Faulkner were bridesmaids, dressed alike in French blue lace gown ornamented with taffeta, with leghorn hats, and carrying orchid and pink flowers tied with wide satin orchid and pink ribbon. Taffeta composed the long bodice cut to form a deep point at the side back, and edged the flounces of the skirt which posed over taffeta, followed out the pointed waistline and draped ankle-length at the back in a full flare. The hats, faced with organdie and having a large taffeta bow at the back were pleated at one side and their slippers were green to match their costumes.

Frilled yellow organdie was chosen for the flower girl, Miss Louise Wright, small daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wright, and with her frock she wore a bandeau in harmonizing shades and carried a basket filled with blue flowers with touches of pink, the Great Parker was best man to the groom. Mr. Gustave Torrance, brother-in-law of the bride, gave her in marriage, and ushering were Mr. Frank Painter, Mr. Gordon Brodie and Mr. Pife Fulcher, of Victoria. The nuptial music was played by Mr. George Bullen, organist of the church, and during the signing of the register Madame Rate Avery was soloist.

The reception after the ceremony was held in the spacious grounds and rooms of "Killarney" which everywhere were lovely with their choicest of flowers.

For the tea table had been chosen rose, blue delphiniums and tapers to match. Mrs. Hall, mother of the bride, assisted by relatives of the guests, wearing an ensemble of black silk lace with hat to match, and corsage of roses. Mrs. Fulcher, the groom's mother, also chose an ensemble of fawn georgette and large green hat, with rose corsage.

Mr. and Mrs. Fulcher are spending their honeymoon on a motor trip, going as far as Banff on West Pifteenth Avenue. The bride traveled in an ensemble of powder blue flat crepe and navy cashmere the silk creating the tailored frock and coat lining, and also facing the scarf collar and bow. Both dress and coat had interesting diagonal stitching, and the former was made with single pleated skirt and narrow belt finished with a silver buckle. The hat of stitched taffeta in a deeper shade of blue had peacock blue trimming and she also wore a beige fox fur.

A meeting of the Knights and Dames of the Thistle was held on Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Chrichmichael, Rock Bay Avenue, to welcome Mr. and Mrs. John Carmichael on their return to Victoria from San Francisco. Victoria Council No. 1 of which Mr. Carmichael had been an active member during his residence here, presented the couple with a token of their good wishes.

Metal-Leather Belts

SUMMERTIME belts from Paris are narrow and fashioned with metal! Metal fastenings, in fact, strike the very newest note on all the most all leather belts shown by couturiers and accessory houses this season.

Buckles are geometrically designed, clasp methods are unique, or there is some sort of a ring and chain arrangement—the three types represented in all conceivable ways. Buds and fastenings constitute the principal source of eye interest since the majority of belts are made of solid color box calf a mere inch in width.

Three models from Hermes have appeared illustrating the various styles of metal fastenings which are new and smart.

Black—in this season of black for accent or all black for chic—is quite the unanimous choice, although there are some very attractive tan belts noted and a very few red, the three constituting the main color range.

Since the arrival of the Summer season, sets of leather belts and flowers are not so prominent as formerly, although this ensemble idea remains a practical and charming one for an occasional note.

CONFECTIONARY IS REMODELED

Mr. H. Tobin Has Installed Most Modern Equipment Into Premises of Clay's Bakery on Fort Street

IS SURROUNDED BY CURIOUS TRADITION

The premises of Clay's well-known confectionary, premises which are distinguished by holding the record in Victoria of having been occupied by one retail business for the greatest number of years, have recently undergone drastic renovations and improvements at the hands of the owner, Mr. H. Tobin.

The window on Fort Street has been known for nearly half a century as displaying the highest grade of French pastry and confectionery. Now that the premises have been reopened, after having been in the contractors' hands for the past four months, the window seems to be filled with even more inviting dainties.

The new bakery, alone, is a revelation in modern equipment. Designed for light, fancy work, it bears the same relation to the oven room of the breadmaker as does a watchmaker's bench to that of a mechanic. Everything, in other words, is more delicately contrived, and there is the same spotless cleanliness everywhere. The two-decker oven was supplied by the Stratford Oven & Rack Company, of Ontario, through their agents, Messrs. Kirkland & Rose, of Vancouver. All other equipment, such as the proving racks, the dough troughs and the Read's three-speed electric sponge-mixer, are tilted with wheels and can be easily moved from place to place, a feature which facilitates cleaning.

The whole premises, the bakery included, are light and airy, and there is a sense of plenty of space which affords an opportunity of seeing the confectionery to the best advantage.

A curious romance has formed around the business, brought about says Mr Tobin, somewhat fortuitously. The business was opened by Mrs. Clay, forty years ago, upon July 1. Twenty years later Mr Tobin became owner, again upon July 1. When Mr Tobin decided to make the recent alterations, he had expected that these would be finished over a month ago but, owing to various delays, the first day upon which he was able to reopen was July 1, exactly twenty years after he had become owner of the business.

"Things seem to work in these twenty-year cycles as far as this business is concerned," said Mr. Clay, but he would venture no prediction as to any epochal event taking place at 619 Fort Street on July 1, 1949.

Golden Wedding Brings Comox Pioneers Together

Many Pay Tribute to Rev. and Mrs. J. X. Willemar, and Presentations Show Esteem in Which Veteran Clergyman and Wife Are Held COURTENAY July 6—Rev. J. X. and Mrs. Willemar, pioneer residents of the district, were honored on the occasion of their golden wedding anniversary. This delightful ceremony was held in the grounds of the Vicarage at Sandwick. Beneath a dale beneath a canopy of orange blossoms and other flowers, and with them Mrs. Guilford of Victoria, sister of Mrs. Willemar and bridesmaid in the wedding long ago, their friends and well wishers were gratifyingly received. The relatives present were their children, Mrs. Cooke, of North Vancouver; Mrs. F. D. Theakes, of Parksville, and Mrs. Harris from the Old Country. One of the sons, Arthur, was able to be present, the other son, Douglas, was unable to attend. There were also eight grand children present.

Messages of congratulation were read by the Rev. O. L. Bourdillon, from the Victoria Deanery, from the Bishop of Columbia who was unable to be present owing to illness, and from the Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Theed Pearse, of Courtenay, ably voiced the sentiments of the city and district in some well-chosen remarks. Attendances Laycock was then called upon. In an interesting manner he outlined Mr. Willemar's activities over the long period in the Comox Valley in spreading the Gospel. On behalf of the committee he presented Mr. and Mrs. Willemar with a purse of gold, and he also presented to them a token of appreciation from the clergy of the diocese.

Mr. Thomas Beckersall, a friend of Mr. Willemar's for the past 37 years, presented an illuminated address, as follows: "The Rev. Jules Xavier Willemar. July 1, 1879 to July 1, 1929. On the occasion of the 50th anniversary of your wedding we wish to express our esteem and affection for you and extend congratulations.

"During your long ministry in the Comox District, from 1871 to 1911 you were always ready with a kind word and helping hand for all pioneers from the day you designed the church at Sandwick. Because you rode a dale beneath a canopy of orange blossoms and other flowers, and with them Mrs. Guilford of Victoria, sister of Mrs. Willemar and bridesmaid in the wedding long ago, their friends and well wishers were graciously received. The relatives present were three children, Mrs. Cooke, of North Vancouver; Mrs. F. D. Theakes, of Parksville, and Mrs. Harris from the Old Country. Victoria School System Historically Reviewed Educational Development Traced From Institution of Hudson's Bay Schools of 1855 to Up-to-Date Accommodation of Present Day.

No subject appears more important to the rising generation, nor to the parents and taxpayers who bear the burden of the present system, than that of education. Whatever attraction may attach to prospects of material success, a creditable educational equipment is regarded as the sine qua non of civic and social standing in any community. The history of educational development, from its first creditable legislative control into the vast and complicated system in vogue in British Columbia today is a study fascinating to those interested in comparative methods under which the young idea has been taught to shoot.

It is with this development as it affects the history of education in Victoria that readers of The Colonist will chiefly be interested. Schools were established and conducted in Victoria for ten years before the first free school system was founded in 1865. In some historical notes prepared by Mr. W. F. C. Pope, secretary of the Victoria School Board, we are informed that the Hudson's Bay Company established public schools in Victoria in 1855 under the supervision of Rev. E. Cridge, M.A. (afterwards Bishop Cridge), each of the teachers being paid $750 salary per annum from the Colonial exchequer, together with fees ranging from $60 to $250 per annum. Six years afterwards the sixth annual examination of pupils of the public school shows an attendance of fifty-three pupils, under the tutelage of a Mr. Barr.

FOUNDING SYSTEM

The Legislative Assembly of Vancouver Island of 1865 set aside $10,000 of public funds to found the free school system which has been in vogue since that date. At the union of the colonies in 1866 the Island free school system became virtually defunct, although the schools in Victoria and a few other places were held open for two years longer.

The educational problem then began to force itself on the authorities, and in 1869-1870 the Common School Ordinance put matters on a more substantial footing, providing for excepting in Victoria, where the tax rolled for by the Ordinance was paid one year and then voted down. This matters stood until 1872, when the first "Act Respecting Public Schools" was passed and assented to on April 11 of that year.

The new Education Act provided for the appointment of a Superintendent of Education and filled the office by appointing Mr. John Jessop to the position. It provided also for a Board of Education and defined the duties and powers thereof. It made possible the popular election of School Trustees and defined their powers, duties and responsibilities, required the holding of annual school meetings and prescribing the functions of these.

The act further defined the duties of public school teachers, provided for annual conventions of teachers, and prescribed the subjects for their examination as to qualification. It regulated the conduct of public schools, prescribed opening and closing exercises, with the taxes of the property to be said in these.

Compared with the distracting examinations of today, the qualifications of teachers were submitted in a simple investigation. Among the subjects regarded as "more or less material" were reading, reading, writing, composition, grammar, arithmetic, bookkeeping, geography and history. Among those "more or less non-essential" were mathematics, for each branch, Latin, French, drawing and music.

ONE MORE TEACHER

By the year 1872 the Victoria schools employed five teachers, but the report of 1873 says attendance had increased so as to make necessary the provision of more accommodation and the employment of "at least one more teacher." It was during this year that the city of Victoria was launched on its continually expanding programme of building, increasing staffs and developing organization that has placed it in the foremost of cities of its size in Canada where educational privileges are concerned.

The first substantial school building to be erected was what now is known as the Boys' Central School, at the Junction of Yates and Fort Streets. The structure is brick and concrete, provides 16 classrooms, and has seven and one-half acres of playgrounds. This was followed in 1881 by the Kingston Street School, a wooden building with seven rooms and a year later the Kings Road School was erected. It also is a wooden structure, with three classrooms. Rock Bay School was next in order of building. It has three classrooms and is a wooden structure.

The twentieth century saw a reversion to the more substantial type of building. The Girls' Central was built of brick in 1907, and contains sixteen classrooms. Victoria West followed in 1908 with eleven classrooms, in brick, and was next year succeeded by the George Jay School, with thirteen rooms. This structure was done in brick and concrete. In 1910 the Sir James Douglas School, also a brick structure, rose on its foundations and provided accommodation for fourteen rooms.

Victoria West Manual was erected in 1911, followed by the George Jay Annual in 1912. Both these are brick structures, with one large room for centres. The same year witnessed the erection of the North Ward Domestic Science School, brick, with one room. This distinct ward had its school erected in 1894, a brick structure, while Spring Ridge School, also suburban, was erected of wood in 1897. This was one of the smaller schools, with but four rooms.

Bank Street School, built of brick, was erected in 1912, and Burnside School in 1913. The latter is of concrete, with four rooms. The year 1913 also saw the rise of Victoria West Domestic Science School, a brick structure with one large room.

TWO FINE BUILDINGS

The year 1914 saw two of the finest schools erected, one being the Margaret Jenkins School and the other the Quadra Street School. Both these buildings are of brick, the first with eight rooms and the latter with nine. The Quadra Manual had been built two years before, as had also the Oaklands a concrete school with fourteen rooms.

Beacon Hill School followed Margaret Jenkins in 1914, a school of brick, with four rooms. The Quadra Primary School was built in 1921, a wooden structure, with four rooms.

The original South Park School, built in 1894, was added to in 1918 by the erection of a manual training school and a domestic science school in 1913. All these structures are of brick, the old school having ten rooms and the others, according to custom, one large room each.

The question of providing suitable High School accommodation had been a burning question for many years previous to the decision to erect the present magnificent structure on Fernwood Road. This large building in concrete was finished in 1923. It holds forty-two rooms, in addition to a commodious auditorium, and stands in a surrounding campus of over eleven acres. The estimated value of the building and property is over half a million dollars.

Thus, within the limits of the Corporation of the City of Victoria, there are (seventy-seven schools, including the High School, and not including the Pemberton Gymnasium, which was erected on the Central School grounds in 1894. The playgrounds, not including several limited city lots, cover fifty-five acres. At the end of 1927 the estimated value of the entire property was $1,495,451.

The advantage of recording the annual expansion of the erection of school buildings lies in the fact that it shows the sectional growth of the city and indicates which parts of the whole community secured amenities in the matter of settlement and civic improvements. Schools are not like railways, they are not built for the purpose of inducing settlement, but to provide facilities for the education of those already settled. As a rule, nothing has the pressure of population decides the erection of greater school accommodation. It is the knowledge of the value of education and the civic conscience of taxpayers that provides the means for the continuous extension of school facilities.

RATEPAYERS GENEROUS

It is not often that Victoria ratepayers have exhibited an inclination to call a halt in matters of school expenditure. Uniformly they have regarded the task of providing educational facilities for their offspring as a primary duty standing next to that of providing a home.

As a result, in the character of its school premises, and in the architecture, substantiability of construction and modern adaptation to intended purposes, the school buildings of Victoria rank high among those in Canada.

During the year 1926 the average attendance of pupils at all the Victoria educational institutions was 6,234. Of these, 253 sought instruction in Victoria College, 1,206 in Victoria High School, and 4,775 in graded schools.

The teaching staff in all branches numbered 206, and the amount paid in salaries to these teachers was $284,989. Fifteen per cent of the total school revenue, or $96,858, was paid by way of grants, in conformity with legislative authority, and in accordance with the School Act at present in force in the Province.

The Public Schools Act of 1873 was the basis of all subsequent legislation affecting education, and it is gratifying to note, by a careful study of this first Act, how carefully the Province's few years ago a distinct advance in the effectiveness and satisfaction of the system now in vogue.

Recent Specimens of "Abstract" Art

THE tremendous interest of men and women today in art in all its forms has caused a well-known professor in psychology to make the statement that the present so-called "modern art" appeals to the masses because it is of "primitive" nature. Above are two specimens of primitive art, the work of Sava Botzaric, young Serbo-Greek artist, showing trend of modern art. Above, centre, is a striking black and white conception of an economic phase in the life of Russia today, drawn by a Slavic artist. Inset Professor William F. Marston, lecturer on psychology at Columbia University, who has made remarkable discoveries about the latent "truth in art." Health and Diet Advice

By DR. FRANK McCOY

BACON

At the risk of incurring the displeasure of my feminine friends and also of some radical vegetarian health enthusiasts, I am going to give you a little lesson today on the use of the kind of pork meat called bacon. My readers know how well I emphasize my belief that the best proteins are beef, mutton, chicken, turkey, rabbit and fish. My main objection on the use of pork is that it contains much an over-abundance of fat in proportion to its protein. This amount of fat seems to make it more difficult of digestion, and many who are sailing like mariners that they cannot use pork in any form without having digestive disturbances.

Some religions prohibit the use of any animal with a cloven hoof that does not chew the cud, and other religions prohibit the use of any kind of food. To those who do not have such religious beliefs, the eating of swine's flesh is mainly a matter of whether or not it is a healthful food, and the whole question then comes down to its ease of digestion.

In this regard I want to be specific in my discussion today, so will simply take up the subject of the use of bacon. Bacon as purchased, contains ten per cent to thirty per cent of water, ninty per cent to eighteen per cent protein, and from forty per cent to as high as sixty per cent of fat.

Bacon is prepared by curing and smoking the back sides and breast pieces of the hog. When selecting bacon, it is best to avoid the kind where the fat appears yellow and to select that with a thin rind and an even streaking of thin white fat. It is more economical to buy in a whole strip, wrapped. It will keep for a long time if kept in a cool place and covered each time after opening. The finest qualities, but more expensive, are often sealed in jars or transparent wrappers.

The best method of cooking bacon is broiling. The slices should be quite thin and the rind and the other edge should be removed. It should be broiled under a hot fire. It should then be eaten as soon as possible after cooking. Prepared in this manner, bacon is readily digested by most people. The fat of bacon is in a granular form that can be assimilated by many people where the other forms of fat are not readily tolerated. The best food is slightly crispy, but not browned.

If not too large a quantity is taken, bacon combines well with any other food. It contains a large amount of fat and for this reason a large quantity will interfere with the digestion of starches or proteins. When broiled or chopped, it makes a pleasant addition to salads, and is a good flavoring agent to many cooked dishes and vegetables.

You have perhaps noticed that I often suggest using a small piece of bacon with eggs at breakfast. I am sure that many people who think they cannot digest bacon will find that they can do so if only a small amount is used and the eggs used at the same time are poached or boiled. Fried in bacon grease are certainly made indigestible, and this has given rise to the belief that the trouble after a bacon and egg breakfast came from the use of the bacon itself.

Try it in the way I have suggested and you will find it will make an interesting addition to your diet.

Sickness in Canada Costs $311,000,000

(By Associated Press)

When a score of people are killed in a railroad wreck, everybody is interested, shocked, sympathetic.

But when a thousand ten thousand people die in a year of unnecessary illness—of illness which could have been prevented—nobody seems to realize what happens.

Some idea of the enormous toll taken by this unnoticed enemy, however, may be gathered from the following excerpt from a radio address by Mr. H. H. Williams, of Toronto, broadcast from a recent meeting of the Toronto Social Hygiene Council:

"The medical profession and the Department of Health will tell you that we still have far too many people sick and far too many premature deaths. The economist will tell you that the effect on industry and economic organization is serious. Only the other day a medical witness before the industrial relations committee of the House of Commons stated that sickness cost the Dominion about $311,000,000 yearly. It is stated that the loss of future earnings through premature death amounts to a billion dollars additional a year.

"Two per cent of our entire population is constantly ill—180,000 individuals every day suffering from disabling illness. Furthermore at least 50 per cent of this illness is preventable and about 35 per cent of our deaths are avoidable.

"One wonders whether the results to the Dominion of a constant drain of its human resources—more costly than that of war itself—are realized by our Canadian people. We feel that the only answer is no. Otherwise as citizens we would be continually striving to right existing conditions—and in this council we are striving using the lecturer, the pamphlet, the radio, the motion picture and the newspaper as tools to the end that public support may be secured for a national movement for health."

"So you are Mr. Blank's secretary?"

"No, his private secretary."

"What's the difference?"

"A private secretary knows more and tells less."

New Ambition For All Past Forty

Says Vigor, Energy, Ability and Healthy Vitality Should Not Be Confined to Youthful Days

Most people, from childhood, carelessly disregard and heedlessly abuse their nerves. At forty, or thereabouts, they begin to pay the penalty. They lose ambition, life's youthful pleasures seem to pall, they tire easily, can't concentrate, have fits of blues and trembling, get nervous headaches or dyspepsia and lose their pep and full firm grip on life.

Depleted nerve force is dangerous, and nerve prostration awaits those who disregard its early warning. But now thanks to modern medical science, nerve force may easily, safely and quickly be brought back to normal so that men and women of forty, fifty, sixty or even older, may again enjoy the youthful nerve strength, vigor and energy of half their age.

A preparation known as Ferbac (double strength) is now being prescribed and highly recommended by leading druggists everywhere. Not a cure-all, glad treatment or habit-forming stimulant, but a positive nerve food and vitalizing agent. A twenty days' use of Ferbac (double strength) is guaranteed to bring a tremendous increase in pep, vigor and energy to any man or woman past forty or its cost will promptly be refunded.

No fairer offer was ever made. To prove you can be young—stay young—strong—vital—mail but 10 cents a day, if you succeed—not a penny if you fail. Have you the courage to make the test? Then ask your druggist for a sealed package of double strength Ferbac (double strength) today.

The Pioneer Legislators of Birdcage Walk

Some Reminiscences of Early Days Among the Politicians of the Province—and Their Electors

The union of the Island and Mainland colonies was not long effected before a much more grave question confronted the united territory. That question was the participation of British Columbia in the confederation of the provinces of Canada. Governor Musgrave as Her Majesty's representative in Victoria at that time. Mr. Joseph Trutch, Chief commissioner of Land for British Columbia, had gone to Ottawa to take part in the negotiation of the terms of this larger union.

As has been stated, this was effected in 1871, and the first Dominion Day celebration occurred in Victoria in that year. At this time Governor Musgrave had completed his term of office. Mr. Joseph Trutch was appointed governor, but had not yet returned from the East and the celebration had to be carried out without vice-regal participation. Each of the two newspapers then published in Victoria waxed sarcastic over this untoward situation, and public sentiment voiced itself clamorously over what appeared to be official contempt of so great an occasion.

As is well known one of the conditions of the entrance of British Columbia into the federation of the Dominion was that a transcontinental railway should connect the Western province with the Eastern, longer settled, and more prosperous provinces. As late as 1875 there appeared no prospect of this condition being completed. Led by Lord Carnarvon a royal accident this impulse was stirred up. It came to a head with the arrival of Lord Dufferin, the first Governor-General of Canada to visit the Coast.

The Governor-General arrived at Esquimalt and disembarked on August 15, 1876. The Volunteer Fire Department had erected a magnificent arch at the corner of Fort and Government Streets. This was intended to express an unqualified welcome to the Governor-General and loyalty to the throne of Her Majesty.

EMPHATIC PROTEST

Its purpose did not suit the malcontents, who determined to register and emphasize their protest by the erection of a second arch at the corner of Fort and Broad Streets. On this arch they had placed a flaring inscription bearing the slogan "Carnarvon Terms or Separation."

The Governor-General declined to ride under this arch. Some of the malcontents, using force, seized the bridles of His Excellency's horses and attempted to drag them under the arch. A mild riot ensued, but rushers drove off the insurgents. A detour was made by the vice-regal carriage, which turned down Government Street, along Fort to Broad. Hence pursuing its uninterrupted way toward Government House thus avoiding the obnoxious arch which the arch had threatened. While this attempt failed of its purpose still the impression produced was sufficiently effective to stir up renewed interest in the railway question, which happily was terminated to the satisfaction of the new province.

Part of the excitement in Victoria over the transcontinental railway some over the altered understanding that the terminus of the railway was to be at Victoria. Belmour Narrows were to have been bridged and the railway brought down the East coast of Vancouver Island. As it happened no one knew at that time where the railway would have terminus.

Col. Moody, commander of the Royal Engineers, stationed at New Westminster, made a journey by sloop and small boats from New Westminster to Port Moody. While at the latter place he told the onswarm of his beat—Mr. John Murray, that, when the transcontinental railway reached the Coast Mr. Murray would be at that point. As the Royal Engineers shortly were to disband he advised that they select the soldiers' free land grants—160 acres—which was given to each of the engineers who chose to stay in the country, somewhere near Port Moody. Many of the engineers and some civilians acted on this advice. That, when it became widely known, aroused the passion of the Islanders.

DISTRACTING CONDITIONS

It was under these distracting conditions that the new Government of British Columbia came on after the removal of the Mainland Government office to Victoria in 1869.

Details of administrative methods and particulars of the pioneer work of the Government are told to The Colonist by an old-timer, in the empire of British Columbia, who removed from the Mainland and constructed the administration of the whole province in this city. The story substantially is as follows:

It was on a Sunday morning in June, 1869, that the Sir Sir James Douglas removed the officials with their office fittings and the plant of The British Columbia Gazette to Victoria. We found six buildings on the south side of James Bay, with grounds occupying the whole block with the exception of the flats facing Birdcage Walk, now known as Government Street. These buildings had been commenced in 1869. On the west side of the street, Messrs. Crudd, Cooper, Franklin and a few others had residences, which since have been removed.

Many people hold the notion that these buildings numbered but five and that they were constructed of wood. A glance at the building remaining on Superior Street will show the material of which all the buildings were constructed. The central building, facing James Bay, was two storys in height with a tower. The Land and Works office was located on the east side of the grounds, while the Government printing office, the same size, was on the west side. The Legislative Hall, with the Attorney-General's office (now occupied by the mineralogical department), was the central building on the south side of the grounds. The Supreme Court Building was on the west side and the caretaker's residence on the east of the Legislative Building. It is understood that the bricks for these buildings were brought from England, and the shingles and woodwork, other than heavy timbers, were of California redwood.

With the late Hon. Dr J. S. Helmcken as Speaker the Legislature took up the business of the country in earnest, but, when the question of confederation arose, many of the former legislators dropped out of political activity and affiliations as they did not believe the terms of confederation could be carried out.

MAN-OF-ALL-WORK

To the single employee—(not official)—of the Government, under the Clerk of the House, acting as page messenger, sergeant-at-arms and "keeper of the keys to the Speaker's cupboard," the magnificent sum of $200 per annum was paid. This, for lighting sixteen fires, conveying the Orders of the Day to the homes of the members, attending fires, lighting gas jets and waiting on the lunchroom.

An old gilded stick of which a crown and a broken cross occupied one end, was laid on the table of the Speaker when he took the chair it was removed and a heavy brass bar at the other end of the chamber was lifted up when the Speaker addressed the House.

It was a rule that the country districts should send representatives to the Legislature only of those who resided in the constituency. Mining districts sent their robust representative men; farmers sent men who understood the wants of the district. The cities usually sent lawyers, doctors and a few newspaper publishers. The only former representative under the Hudson's Bay Company was the late W. F. Tolmie, father of the present Premier, and he was elected by the farmers of what was known then as Victoria County.

During the intervals between sessions of the House many of the employees of the Government lived in one of the Government buildings. This arrangement prevailed during the whole of the Seventies. The informant of The Colonist in this article, while attending to the various duties in the Government buildings, earned his trade as a printer on the staff of the morning paper.

After almost half a century, abandoning his duties as an employee of the Government, a vote was paid recently to the Legislative Assembly. It was like a new world to the adult and mature individual who witnessed the first session of the British Columbia Legislature in the Barracks on the shores of the Fraser River in the Sixties. The modern ceiling, formality, dignity, and a lot more were a revelation when memory reflected on its contrast with the pioneer simplicity of procedure.

WORTHY OF EMULATION

It may be questioned whether the members of the present Legislature know a great deal about the pioneer members of the House. If these modern members have the debating ability and initiative of such men as Amor de Cosmos, Thomas Humphreys, William Smythe, John Robson, David W. Higgins, J. F. McCreight, A. R. Robertson, Robert Beaven, George Anthony Walkem, G. B. Martin and many others of the old-time legislators they are fortunate.

Of Amor de Cosmos it has been said that he was the "stormy petrel" of the ancient House, but his actions and his words will be remembered long by those of British Columbia pioneers who saw at the time, and since, the force and impact of his words and opinions.

In those days—and, indeed, until 1895—it was the "Ins" and the "Outs." A Government was judged, not only by those who supported it in the House, but also by the voters who sent them to office. The latter elected to support the best man available. It was not a question as to whether a member was Conservative or Liberal or of any pronounced political faith or affiliation. No Government stood long that favored wealth or monopoly.

In those days a Government might last a week or a month or for a long period. On one occasion the electors of the capital city met while the House was in session. They marched across James Bay singing something about "hanging somebody's body on a sour apple tree", and invaded the House. Some of the members took refuge in the anteroom; the bar of the House was not raised that night by the sergeant-at-arms. One of the "mob" lifted it and the floor of the Legislature was filled with invaders. The gallery also was packed with voters in the same temper. At midnight the Lieutenant-Governor received the resignation of the Government. Such an event could not transpire today without serious charges, perhaps of lese majeste.

BURNED IN EFFIGY

Another Government lasted only one week. Numerous Legislatures held only one session. It was not unusual for constituents to hold public meetings and demand the resignations of their members. Effigies of legislators were burned in the middle of the streets of Victoria.

All these incidents throw light on the intensity and earnestness with which the citizenship regarded the interests of the country. There was no compromise where matters of apparent principle were involved. The railway question immediately after confederation and the Oriental question seemed to be the chief subjects of consideration. Both inside and outside of the House feeling was intense and often bitter. Long speeches full of vehemence, prophecy and denunciation and many all-night sessions testified to the gravity with which these subjects were considered. If abnormal measures were introduced into the Legislature they either were tabled out or the Government was defeated on division.

The new order (Roman Bill Bar) reminds one of little that is precious to the m a ny of the pioneers, and of little that existed in the Sixties. The new Parliament Buildings overshadow all but recollection of the first legislative chambers wherein were laid the foundations of present-day security and prosperity. The Government Gazette is a remaining relic of the past. The old Legislative Hall on Superior Street is sturdy kept and maintained not alone for its present usefulness, but as a memorial which should not be allowed to decay. Birdcage Walk has merged into Government Street. Only memories of the homeless, jokes, jibes and political tragedies which it recalls remain. James Bay bridge has disappeared and newcomers cannot conceive its peculiar stagey architecture. Palatial steamers land where once men slipped out of Indian canoes. Governors, legislators, soldiers, naval officers and men, all their panoply, gilt and glitter are gone—never to return. The evidences of the worthy work of these early pioneers are to be witnessed in every part of the province. A knowledge of their sterling worth but adds to appreciation of their handiwork. In the legislative chamber the sons of many of these pioneers have found a place to emulate the example of the forefathers who carved out the roadway to their present positions. The highest offices in the country are held by many of those who can look back on what their predecessors accomplished.

Undoubtedly the few of those pioneers who remain wish the men now favored with the confidence of the public the same spirit, the same devotion to duty, the same success and the same honor in their own posterity as their fathers deserved.

How Long Does Your Vacation Last?

Whether it's two months or two weeks, here's a way to record your fun and enjoy it again many times after . .

YOU'LL soon be right in the middle of vacation—having a grand and glorious time. Swimming . . boating . . . fishing . . . beach parties. Each day will bring more good times.

Exciting things will happen one after the other. New friends will join in on the fun. Places you've never been before will be visited. You'll enjoy it all from beginning to end. That's just what vacations are for.

But how long will these good times last? Certainly you don't want to trust these enjoyable experiences to memories that grow less and less distinct each year. You want to be able to keep them alive—to recall them in all their glorious detail many times afterwards. Here's a way you can.

Take plenty of snapshots of the places you go—the things you do—the sights you see. Then whenever you want you can "drag" them out—look them over—and enjoy again the vacation thrills each snapshot will recall.

As for not owning a Kodak—really, there's no excuse for it. Every day of your life, probably, you pass stores that sell them. The cost is whatever you want to pay. There's a genuine Eastman camera, the Brownie, as low as $2.25 and Kodaks from $5 up. And every Eastman camera makes excellent snapshots.

Kodak Film is the familiar yellow box is dependably uniform. It pays the picture. Expert photo finishers are ready in every community to develop and print your films quickly and skilfully.

LURE OF DIAMONDS LEADS MEN ASTRAY

Judge Says Rich Diamond Finds in South Africa Are Curse, Not Blessing

KIMBERLEY, South Africa, July 6.—Commenting on the demoralizing effect of the rich diamond finds in South Africa Justice P. A. Rulten, at the Griqualand West Criminal Sessions recently when the outstanding feature of the calendar was the extraordinary number of charges under the Diamond Trade Act, nine cases out of 11 being of this character declared

"It causes one furiously to think and to wonder whether the recent discovery of so many alluvial diamond fields is not a curse rather than a blessing to the country. It certainly seems to have the effect of enormously increasing illicit dealing in diamonds. One finds men who have hitherto led an honest and blameless life going way in their frantic haste to acquire wealth, to temptations which the discovery of rich alluvial fields cause, and you find them being sent to gaol in consequence

"A very small proportion is successful. The large majority are reduced to a state of dire poverty. The discovery recently of so many alluvial fields has so far, proved nothing but a national calamity."

PAINTING NEEDS CAREFUL STUDY

Blending of Colors in Interior Decoration and Manner of Executing Work Important

There are many factors which go to make the home-beautiful; and perhaps not the least of these comes from a careful survey of the needs in interior decoration. As the most important item in this respect, painting should receive the careful attention of the owner, or tenant.

Not only is the selection of colors and the blending of them with surrounding objects of importance, but the time when painting should be done and the manner of its doing are equally important.

It must always be remembered that one of the worst conditions under which painting can be done is when the brush is applied in the presence of moisture. It is essential to the successful outcome of the painter's art to be sure that all the surfaces to be painted are thoroughly dry before commencing, because if paint is applied over a surface containing moisture (especially if the moisture be internal), blistering or peeling of the film will commence immediately the house becomes warm and the moisture commences to dry.

Lumber and plaster in a new house are very apt to contain material quantities of internal moisture and therefore painting should not be done until these have been given a good chance to dry out. Being particularly porous, new plaster is very subject to dampness, and should never be painted on until dry and should not be painted in damp weather.

Desire to have done with the painting and enjoy the pleasures of a beautiful home often defeat the object itself. Do not be in a hurry and, when you begin, be quite sure that the surface is completely dry. You will notice the difference and the job will remain as a pleasing monument to your patience. There will be no blistering and no peeling well worth waiting a while for.

Apart from the proper preparation of the surface, the most important conditions of a good job of painting are a fairly even, warm temperature, free from excessive moisture.

Spring and Fall have commonly been looked upon as the correct time for painting. This is a mistake and if persisted in is likely to prove vexatious and costly. In the Spring and in the Fall there are more fluctuations in temperature and the atmosphere is generally moist.

Summer and Winter, then, are the two best seasons in which to undertake painting the home interior. In the Summer the weather is warm and the sun helps in drying out the internal moisture, while in the Winter the same thing happens from the warmth of the fires which are kept going in the furnaces and fireplaces. Though you may not notice it, it is a fact that in the early Spring and the late Fall the interior of the house tends to be damper than at other seasons.

So it should be remembered that the two conditions to be avoided during the painting at the proper season of interiors of new houses are internal moisture in the building materials and the presence of surface moisture from condensation.

Study of Growth Of Child to Be Made Scientific

CLEVELAND Ohio, July 6.—Five years from now scientists at Western Reserve University hope to be able to tell you just what constitutes a "well-born child," and exactly what he ought to be like at various years of his life.

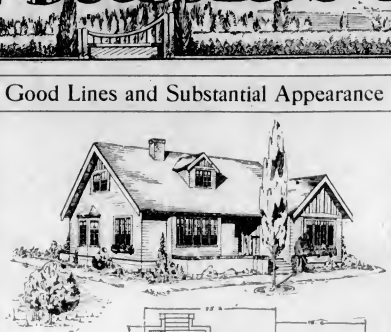
The project was announced at the commencement week meeting of the Chapter of Sigma Xi, honorary society of Applied Science by Dr T. Wingate Todd, Professor of Anatomy at Western Reserve.

It is proposed to study the child in and before the nursery school period as well as to examine the growing body and expanding mind of boys and girls in the second decade of life in order to find out how the foundation of adult behavior becomes fixed during that period.

When this study is completed Dr. Todd and his co-workers expect to tell parents what their children ought to be at ten, at fifteen or at twenty.

The investigation to be started this Fall will be made possible by the Charles F. Brush Foundation, of which Dr. Todd is a director. This foundation was established more than a year ago when Charles F. Brush, Cleveland philanthropist, inventor and a trustee of Case, created $500,000 which he dedicated to the betterment of human stock.

Good Lines and Substantial Appearance



The complete plans for this bungalow, including working drawings and specifications, were prepared by the Architectural Small House Service Bureau (B.C.), Vancouver

A BUNGALOW, shown with wide cedar siding and shingle roof, containing five rooms on the ground floor, with attic space which can be divided into two more bedrooms, with a bathroom, at the time the building is done or at a later period, should the necessity for more space arise.

A big living-room, with an open fireplace, opening into the dining-room, which, in turn, has access to the terrace in the rear through French doors, two good bedrooms, convenient to bathroom, and a kitchen of more than the ordinary size mark this plan, which has many possibilities and is well worth careful study.

Modified English Home Has Appeal

THIS typically modified English home combines many livable qualities. The terrace enclosure or patio offers the promise of many delightful hours out of doors. Every room has ample light and the three bedrooms all have cross ventilation. Further information about this plan may be had from "Beautiful Homes," at Spencer's

Women Sat in Parliament In Time of Plantagenets; House of Lords Invaded

LONDON, July 4.—Many people imagine that Lady Astor was the first woman to sit in a British Parliament, but in the Middle Ages women were an essential part of the deliberative assemblies, says "Overseas." In the reign of Edward I, for example, the Abbesses of Shaftesbury, Berking, St Mary of Winchester and of Wilton, were summoned to Westminster, while in the reign of Edward III a number of women of high degree, including Mary, Countess of Norfolk; Alanor, Countess of Ormond; Anne Devereux, Countess of Pembroke and Matilda, Countess of Oxford, were members of the National Council, and they seem to have made their presence felt, just as potentes do do the women members of the House of Commons today.

Parliament, during the women's suffrage movement, used frequently to be invaded or interrupted by advocates of women's rights anxious to redress the wrongs of their sex. But this, again was merely a case of history repeating itself for John Stow, the tailor-antiquarian records that one day in 1426, while Parliament was sitting "one Mistress women of London of good account and well apparelled," went "openly to the Upper House of Parliament and delivered letters to the Duke of Gloucester, to the archbishops and the other lords because he (the Duke of Gloucester) would not deliver his wife, Jaqueline, out of her grievous imprisonment (she was at the time detained a prisoner by the Duke of Burgundy) and suffering her there to remain unkindly whilst he lived in adultery contrary to the law of God and the honorable estate of matrimony." It is gratifying to note that as a result of this courageous intervention Parliament was induced to "do something about it," even if Jacqueline of Holland, the lady on whose behalf they pleaded, was one of the most married women in history, who in the course of a short period of thirty-five years acquired four husbands, one of them bigamously and one trigamously.

Ladies at one time during the eighteenth century had admission not only to the public galleries, but actually to the sacred floor of the House itself, where they would sometimes sit by the side of members. The ultimate abandonment of this privilege in favor of absolute exclusion came about through a display of frectiousness on the part of the ladies. A great debate in February, 1712, had drawn to the House an exceptionally large number of ladies. Not content with the galleries they insinuated upon some seats from which they were customarily excluded. As members themselves were crowded out, an order was given to eject the ladies. The order, however, was easier to give than to execute. The ladies having come to the House for an evening's amusement, saw no adequate reason for not getting it, and the arguments of the authorities left them coldly unconvinced. In vain the officials implored and threatened in turn. The ladies absolutely declined to move. They laughed and stamped and jeered and told the officials with devastating candor what they thought of them. The authorities were in despair! They could not use force and on the other hand, it was not possible to permit the mandate of the House to be flouted. In the difficulty they adopted the only course open to them. They opposed obduracy to obdurancy and in the long run won the day, but, as a contemporary account declares, "it was a full two hours before the skirts of the last of the ladies disappeared through the doorway of the House."

After this obstreperous exploit, so rigorous was the bar against ladies that Mrs Sheridan (the lovely Elizabeth Linley, wife of Richard Brinsley Sheridan) was driven to the expedient of wearing male attire in order to secure admission to the galleries to hear her husband's eloquence.

How Much of Rain Finds Its Way to River and Ocean?

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 4.—What becomes of the rain, snowfall and snow? The question has been answered by the Geological Survey of the Department of Interior after a three-year study of Pomperaug Basin in Connecticut, which is regarded as a typical area.

Of about forty-four inches of water that falls annually in the basin as rain or snow, twenty-one inches flows out through streams. Twenty-three inches of it is returned to the atmosphere by the process of evaporation from the soil, water surfaces and surface objects and from being drawn up by roots of plants and given off through their leaves.

The twenty-one inches that is carried away by streams, twelve inches never gets into the ground, but immediately runs off while about eight inches of the river water first finds its way underground and reappears in springs and seeps

INDIAN WAR CHIEF

SASKATOON, Sask., July 4.—A great warrior in his youth, hero of legendary tales of heroism, Rock Thunder, eighty-five years old, one of the oldest Cree Indians on the Piapot Reserve, died recently. At the graveside, while the pagan burial rites of his tribe were performed, Rock Thunder's two wives stood surrounded by several of his children and many of his great-grandchildren

Rock Thunder led many a daring exploit when his tribe waged war against the Blackfeet in the Cypress Hills.

He acquired his name when, separated from a war party which he had accompanied as a scout, he sighted an encampment of Blackfeet in a ravine. He was far from the Cree warriors, so decided to attack the enemy single-handed. He gathered a number of large rocks and placed them behind a pole at the brink of the ravine. Then he released the pole and the rocks clattered down the hillside into the Blackfeet camp. The enemy decamped.

The competition will be over seventy-two holes medal play and the competitors will be playing on a different Inglewood course than twelve months ago for many more bunkers have been put in under the eye of A. Vernon Marsh, local architect.

BOY STEIN

Victoria will be well represented at the meet. Phil Taylor, of the Victoria Golf Club and a former title-holder; Walt Gravlin, Uplands Golf Club; Alex Marling, Oakwood Golf and Country Club, and Freddy Burns, of Macaulay Golf Club, are expected to be starters. The local contingent of crossed players is expected to be the limelights as every one of them is right on his game and will continue practicing until a day before the starter calls out their names.

Entries may be sent to Walter Pursey, the Inglewood professional, accompanied by the usual fee, dollars. Bob Johnston, veteran Seattle pro, Walter Pursey and Bill Harley are in charge of the tourney. Eight cash prizes are up for competition while if an amateur becomes through, a magnificent piece of silverware awaits him. ALBIE DAVIES TO FIGHT SATURDAY

Local Featherweight Will Meet Eddie Graham in Ten-Round Bout

Bob Vipond, matchmaker for Central Boxing Club, stated last night that Albie Davies had accepted Eddie Graham's challenge to a ten-round bout in Victoria at 126 pounds, and the contest will be staged at the Tillicum gymnasium next Saturday night. Graham, who hails from Portland, is the claimant of the Pacific Northwest featherweight title, and it is the intention to stage this bout as the first of a series of elimination contests for the title. The Portland fighter issued a challenge yesterday to both Tommy Fielding and Albie Davies, but as Fielding is now in California he is not available for bouts here at the present time.

ALBIE DAVIES

Davies fought Graham a six-round bout at Bellingham a month ago when he won a very close decision over the Portland fighter. Since that fight Graham has won a decision over the noted Eddie Thomas who is now demolished all Portland, but a close decision to Hector McDonald, who outweighed him ten pounds and knocked out George Ainsworth of Vancouver. Local fans who have witnessed the Portland fighter in action, predict that next Saturday's contest will prove to be one of the best that has ever been staged here.

Vipond is at present working on a supporting card to the Davies vs. Graham ten-round bout, which he predicts will be of better calibre than what has been offered here at past promotions. Jumbo Davies, who competed in the main event of the Dominion Day boxing card at Calgary against Billy McBeath, has been secured for the semi-wind-up of next Saturday's card, and a suitable opponent is being sought for him. The local fighters will train in the country until next Wednesday night, when they will transfer their activities to the Tillicum gymnasium, where they will work out for the benefit of the fans.

J.B.A.A. TO PLAY LANGFORD TODAY

A tennis tournament will be held this afternoon at the J.B.A.A. tennis courts at the Gorge, between members of the club and the Langford Tennis Club. Men's and women's doubles and mixed doubles will be played.

All members of the J.B.A.A are asked to attend this tournament.

AT HIS EXPENSE

During a visit to the art gallery the teacher was giving his pupils a short lecture on some of the great masters of the past. "And, children," he remarked, "some of the famous painters of years gone by were so clever that they could often change a smiling face into a frowning one by means of one swift stroke with a brush!"

"Pooh!" Johnny muttered. "I don't see anything clever about that. My mother can always do it!"

PROCESSED FRUIT GOES OVERSEAS

Holman Company Places Order for Strawberries Raised by Kealing Co-operative Association

Mr. Harry Beach, of the Holman Packing Company, reported to the Ministry of Agriculture today that 1,000 tons, or 90,000 lbs. of the 1929 strawberry crop, processed under government inspection, have been sold to British buyers this week. These berries were supplied by the Kealing Co-operative Fruit Exchange and were processed by the solid pack method as the Holman Co. plant at Lake Hill.

Last year the Holman Packing Co. was successful in processing and disposing of a fair tonnage of Island berries, and Mr. Beach is convinced that the solid pack is an economical and satisfactory method for the processing of Island berries. The price received this year is satisfactory, and will net a margin of profit to the growers.

A satisfactory phase of this deal is the fact that the 90,000 lbs. of berries are being exported to Great Britain, and will not only tend to create a market abroad, but will relieve the local market of this surplus fruit. Sometime ago it was reported that Mr. Beach had sent a trial shipment of these berries to England, and it is believed that they were received over there very favorably.

By the solid pack is meant the processing of prime strawberries into a gallon can without sugar. The cans are fully sterilized and sealed and each gallon can contains a fraction over 6 lbs. of fruit. The berries preserved will keep indefinitely and will retain their color and flavor.

According to reports the present year's berry crop promised a expected to be a profitable one. The assistance in processing rendered by the government is appreciated, who having maintained a fair price during the season, and extended the marketing period.

On the morning of their first business session, Tuesday, July 23, the visiting chiefs will be welcomed by Mayor W. H. Malkin. Addresses will be delivered by Hon. R. H. Pooley, K.C., Attorney-General, former Vancouver Chief J. H. Cuthbert, and the association president, Chief Thomas Graham.

Financial Power Said to Be Used By Church Party

By HERBERT BAILEY
(British Canadian Press)

LONDON, July 6.—A violent new controversy is now threatened in the Church of England. It is asserted that the fight for power between the high church and the low church has developed into a campaign for the purchase of advowsons. The Bishop of Liverpool has already protested at "livings being bought by party societies with the object of imposing a particular view upon the church."

Rev. Arnold Pinchard, secretary of the English Church Union, says, in a statement to The Daily Chronicle that "there is not a shadow of doubt that there is a great deal of activity going on in the purchase of advowsons. I think there is being waged a strongly financed campaign for securing the patronage of as many livings as possible in what is called low church interests. It is a scandal that ought to be dealt with immediately."

"No," replied Mr. Newrich, "I don't want anything that's chipped."

Those Who Come and Go at Provincial Museum

By H. W. HART

By H. W. HART

If there is anything which brings more joy to the heart of an anthropologist than the discovery of a new specimen it is that of gaining knowledge of a specimen already in his care. This fact was amply demonstrated by the dignified but obvious excitement which permeated the Provincial Museum staff on Thursday of last week.

The subdued furore centered around a double mask which has taken up wall space for fifteen years. The display ticket tells all who care to read that it is "a double mask, one-half raven and one-half galukwiwi. Latter worn in front. Made of red cedar, painted red, white and black; crown and fringe of plain alder-dyed cedar bark, feathers and down. Lower jaws moveable."

Beyond these bare facts the specimen was an unknown quantity. And had not an Indian, his wife, and two youthful replicas of the brave and his squaw, staged a powwow of large and alarming proportions before the double-headed monster. It would still be shrouded in mystery.

The first indication that an unusual condition had arisen was a babel of voices. It sounded as though it were just inside the door and created the idea that members of the Loyal Order of Moose were struggling with an attendant in an effort to remove the bull moose, which is the first specimen on the main floor.

But everything was in order there. The sound was easily traced to the lower floor, and a solitary "paleface" hailed in amazement while four "redskins" jabbered away seemingly in a concerted effort to drive away all the devils of their ancestors, gesticulating in a terrifying manner the while.

When the spasm subsided and their mental condition showed signs of improvement, they were asked to show "just cause or impediment" why they should not be removed from the building, by force, for disturbing the peace and causing the gamesters on the top floor to make sundry mistakes in the spelling of scientific phrases.

Just cause was shown, and the physical fitness of the four was surprised as sufficient impediment to forcible removal. Discretion was shown, and as a result of that discretion valuable historic information was obtained.

THE STORY

Still laboring under the influence of strong excitement, the "redskin" related the following story as told to him by his grandfather. A story which is contained in no record of the life and customs of the Indians of British Columbia.

Long ago, before the white man came to the "land of the setting sun," the Indians were terrorized by two monstrous birds that took a fearful toll of human life, destroying the tribes and filling the air with the wailing of spirits in torment.

The galukwiwi, a man-eating bird which required two adults or four children each day to provide it with sustenance, was propitiated by a yearly ceremony during which the chief medicine man wore a mask representing that bird. This ritual secured an amnesty for the tribe and peace reigned throughout the land.

Then a raven of gigantic proportions swooped down from out of the blue. This bird required the brains of three hundred persons daily. The medicine men were hastily assembled and a ceremony in veneration of the raven, with masks and trappings included, was inaugurated, and peace and security returned again.

But the galukwiwi took umbrage at being supplanted by a rival and recommenced operations, taking its daily quota of old and young. The situation was hopeless, but the man-eating bird was the lesser of two evils. So the ceremony to the raven was continued while the galukwiwi played havoc with the people.

At last a daughter was born to the principal wife of the great chief, whose loveliness was so great that she was named "Glory of the Morning." She grew in beauty and in wisdom and was beloved by all the tribes in the land.

Grieved by the troubles of her people she sought the aid of the great spirit, and a message was given to her in a dream. She was told to have a double-headed mask prepared and a ceremony performed in which each bird would receive equal homage.

THE SOLUTION

The solution of the problem was hailed with delight. A huge double-headed mask was made and several thousands of smaller size. The small masks were mounted on posts, which were erected in a great circle, sufficient space being left between the posts for a person to pass between.

All the people of the tribe were gathered within the circle and the principal medicine man, wearing the mask with the galukwiwi in front, danced round the circle, passing in and out between the posts as he went around. Then with a final flourish he dashed into the centre of the circle and whirled madly until he fell to the ground exhausted. This ended the reign of terror and life became secure and pleasant.

One point made the story appear doubtful and the Indian was asked how it was the raven was satisfied to let the galukwiwi have the position of honor in front. To this he replied that the galukwiwi always attacked from the front while the raven attacked its victim from the rear, cracking his skull behind before extracting the brains. This peculiarity made it possible to honor both birds without offence to either.

NOTHING WASTED

When it was pointed out that no remains of these monsters had ever been found to corroborate the story, the Indian explained that it was the duty of the medicine men to spirit away the bodies of both species after death and drop them into the depths of the ocean, where they served as a tribute to the killer whales, who in return for this service refrained from attacking the canoes engaged in the fishing industry.

This is probably the first instance of putting waste products to profitable use, and indicates the remarkable mental development which the Indians attained.

Before he left the Indian was shown the totem pole which some visitors declare represents Moses holding aloft the ten commandments. He knew nothing of the commandments, and was not pleasantly interested in the name of Moses. Each time the name was mentioned he pulled his watch out of his pocket and displayed it with a flourish.

On the third occasion he showed signs of deep annoyance, leaving the impression that he associated the name of Moses with the occasional temporary absence of his watch, and resented what he thought to be an insinuation that the cost of his trip to Victoria was met by temporary financial assistance on the security of personal effects.

The story of Moses and the lost tribe of Israel is still in the controversial stage and the museum authorities can accept no responsibility for any statement made by unauthorized persons until an Indian of the tribe comes forward to speak on their behalf.

At a small country church a newly-married couple were receiving some advice.

"You must never both get cross at once. It is the husband's duty to protect his wife whenever an occasion arises, and a wife must love and honor and obey her husband, and follow him wherever he goes."

"But—" pleaded the young bride.

"I haven't finished yet," remarked the clergyman. "She must—"

"But, please"—in desperation—"can't you alter that last part? My husband is a postman."

(Do not attempt to speak at all unless you know before you get up what you intend to say.—Liberal Press). That is first-class for the Liberal who seeks a seat though his chances are dim. But he ought to be told what to say, or to do, when his bearers start talking to him. Such as when for the vote of the women he woos and relies on the cut of his phin, if they greet him with laughter and heart-breaking boos he should hiss like the goose that he is.—Daily Herald.

JOE WRIGHT BEATEN IN SCULLS FINAL BY YARD

Bud Hocking and Marjorie Leeming Capture City Clay Court Tennis Titles

Two Local Players Stave Off Outside Challenges in Final

Hocking Defeats Cunningham, While Miss Leeming Stops Marjorie MacFarlane—Great Matches Feature End of Tourney

Playing a brilliant all around brand of tennis, Bud Hocking defeated Gerald Cunningham, Nanaimo, in straight sets yesterday afternoon for the men's singles city clay court tennis championship at the courts of the Kingston Street Lawn Tennis Club. The score was 7-5, 6-4, 7-5.

One of the largest crowds that has ever witnessed the finals of a city tournament sat in on an afternoon of the most exciting and spectacular tennis seen here for a long time. All the matches were real thrillers and most of them were in doubt right up to the end.

Miss Marjorie Leeming annexed the ladies singles title in a keenly fought three-set duel with Miss Marjorie MacFarlane. The former Canadian champion won the first set 6-3, lost the second 6-4, and took the deciding set 6-4. Both played a strong driving and placing game and it was Miss Leeming's great steadiness, which was the deciding factor.

Hocking played great tennis when he beat Gerry Cunningham. His driving placements were wonderfully accurate and his volleying left nothing to be desired. In fact it was the latter part of the champion's game which really won him the match. At the same time Cunningham was putting up a great fight. He was using his deadly forehand drive whenever possible, and many of his passing shots were unplayable. Misfortune came his way in the first set when a string in his racket broke and he had to play with a strange one while his trusty war-club was being rendered first aid.

A GREAT DUEL

Marsh Gordson and Eric McCallum won the men's doubles event in a gruelling five-set encounter with Mr. Isaacs and Bud Hocking. This match was perhaps the feature of the day. Hard driving, careful lobbing and lightning volleying drew round after round of applause from the spectators. The teams won alternate sets all the way through and there was little to choose between them. The brilliant volleying and smashing of McCallum and Hocking was an outstanding feature.

The ladies doubles final in which Miss Mary Campbell and Miss Hope Leeming defeated the Misses Marjorie and Marion MacFarlane of New Zealand, was another hot struggle which went the limit. The sisters took the first and third sets by scores of 6-2, 6-4 and lost the second 6-4. The features were the splendid driving of the MacFarlane sisters and Miss Campbell and the spectacular overhead work of Miss Leeming.

In a stubbornly fought battle replete with prolonged rallies, full of smashing play at the net and accurate placing all over the court, Miss Hope Leeming and McCallum defeated Miss Mary Campbell and Bud Hocking to win the mixed doubles championship.

The closeness of the play was well indicated by the score which was 6-6, 6-3. In the second set it looked as if a third would be necessary when Miss Campbell and Hocking led at 5-4 and 6-5, but their opponents tied it up at six-all and led 7-6. However, the event always drew even at seven-all, but tried thereafter and Miss Leeming and McCallum won the next two games and the match.

In the ladies consolation singles Miss Kitchen defeated Mrs. Monkton, 6-2, 6-3. In the semi-final, and then took Miss Jean Campbell in the final.

The final of the men's consolation singles will be played today between C. F. Bird and C. Clarke.

At the conclusion of play, President O. M. Prentice spoke briefly and thanked those present for their co-operation in helping to make this tournament one of the most successful ever held. The prizes were then presented to the winners by Mrs. Prentice.

Royals Go Under Before Saints in Connaught Match

VANCOUVER, July 6.—In one of the most exciting and certainly one of the fastest games seen this long, drawn-out season, at Cox Jones Park, the rejuvenated St. Saviours eleven put an end to the Royals' further progress in the Connaught championship series, when the churchmen scored a decisive victory over the Westminster club by 3-1, and he it said, the better side won on the day's play.

BRITISH TRACK STARS TRIUMPH

Oxford-Cambridge Team Defeats Hamilton Olympic Club by Seven Points to Five

EDWARDS SCORES DOUBLE VICTORY

OLYMPIC STADIUM, HAMILTON, Ont., July 6—Canada bowed to Great Britain in the crossed bars this afternoon, when the Oxford-Cambridge track and field stars vanquished the Hamilton Olympic Club in a dual meet by seven points to five. The meet was decided on final place, only one point being given for each.

The Britons came to Canada for the meet before going to the United States, where they meet Yale-Harvard and Princeton-Cornell teams next Saturday and the following week-end.

Phil Edwards Canadian Olympic athlete and holder of the United States national and intercollegiate half-mile, scored a double victory in the meet, winning both the mile and half-mile runs.

Johnny Pitzpatrick, Hamilton Olympic, likewise had a double victory, scoring in both the 100 and 220 yard sprints.

The Oxford-Cambridge margin of victory scored in the two-mile race was by 1 M. Humphrey, Oxford, led to the broad jump, which was won by R. W. Revens, of Cambridge.

The only new Canadian record of the afternoon was made by Humphrey in the two-mile. He tripped off the distance in 9 minutes, 23 1-10 seconds, 2-5ths of a second better than the record made by T. Sheriff, New York, which has stood for twenty years.

MEDAL ROUND TO START TODAY

A new competition will be introduced at the Colwood Golf and Country Club, starting this morning, in the form of a seventy-two-hole medal round stretched over a period of two weeks. Players will be allowed their full handicap, and a large entry is expected to start.

Players will choose their own partners and arrange for their starting times, but must register before starting play. The committee in charge has a fine list of prizes on hand for the players turning in the lowest scores.

On July 20 the Cairnlea foursomes will commence for the J. H. Lee Cup.

Loses Final by Scant Yard

JOE Wright, famous Canadian sculler, who yesterday lost his Diamond Sculls to L. Gunther, of Holland, by a scant yard in the final at Henley. Wright in the past three years has been one of the finalists, winning last year from Lee, of England. Two years ago he had a good lead but, nearing the finish, he rowed a little off line and one of his oars became entangled in a rope on a landing, which cost him the famous Sculls. Wright had some of the toughest opposition this year and his preliminary heats apparently had their effect on his strength.

Austin Is Hero of Wimbledon in Eyes Of English People

Twenty-One-Year-Old Star Is a Comer, Is Opinion of Vincent Richards—British Team Improved Under Kozeluh's Instructions

By VINCENT RICHARDS
Professional Tennis Champion of the World
(Copyright, 1929, by the North American Newspaper Alliance)

This year will go down in English tennis history as the brightest in more than a decade for John Bull. After years of waiting and discouraging defeats, England at last has a player in whom it can take hope for a renewal of its glorious victories of the past.

H. W. Bunny" Austin, twenty-one-year-old hero of Wimbledon is the lad who seems destined to lead this country out of the tennis wilderness. For the first time in seven years he has given England a quarter finalist in her national championship, and more than that, he went even to the semi-finals.

In fighting his way to a meeting with Jean Borotra, of France, Austin defeated Frank Hunter, United States, Jacques Brugnon, France and Baron Von Kehrling, Hungary. This is easily the most impressive piece of work an Englishman has turned in on the courts since the war, even more encouraging than J. C. Gregory's victory in the Australian championship last Winter.

NOT SINCE 1905

When it is realized that England has not produced a winner of her own championship at Wimbledon since 1905, one can get a faint idea how much they are delighted with the great work of Austin Prom 1905 on the title has been in the hands of either an Australian, an American or a Frenchman, and for a country once supreme in tennis and the founder of the game, as England was, that hurts.

Austin has been in the public eye as a tennis player for a number of years, but no one ever thought he would go so far. His physique was thought not to be strong enough to stand up against the championship play But what "made" Austin was the coaching he got from Karel Kozeluh, Czechoslovakian professional. For the last two years Kozeluh, whom American tennis fans saw in action in 1928, has been coaching the English Davis Cup team, and for two weeks before Wimbledon he worked with Austin daily.

These weeks with the great European professional helped Austin not only in tennis technique and correct his faults but improved his physical condition and stamina. After standing off so steady a player as Borotra, a game well on defence for hours each day Austin was able to last the full route in his matches at Wimbledon and to play as strong a game in the last set as in the first. This was something he seldom had been able to do before, and much of the credit goes to Kozeluh.

HAVE BENEFITED

Not only Austin but all the members of the English squad, which is now in the final round of the European Davis Cup ties, have benefited by Kozeluh's instruction. Gregory is a much improved player since Karel began to help him, and Nigel Sharpe, another comer, has zoomed up his game considerably in the last year His victory over Baron De Morpurgo, Italy's star ace, was hailed almost as enthusiastically by the English fans as Austin's triumph over Hunter.

England is definitely going up the ladder in tennis, and good coaching has started her after years of disaster on the courts. The United States has begun to realize the wisdom of putting young players under competent teachers, and if it is to hold its own with France, England and Germany in the international arena, it must give up-coming hopefuls the benefit of the same competent coaching the young players are getting on the other side.

P. JOHNSTON WINS ISLAND LAWN BOWLING

Burnside Bowler Defeats Ewens, of Nanaimo, in Final to Capture Peace Trophy

DEFENDING CHAMP LOSES FIRST ROUND

P. Johnston, of Burnside, won the Peace Cup, emblematic of the Island lawn bowling championship, yesterday at the Victoria Club's greens, when he defeated Ewens, of Nanaimo, in 13th final, 15-6. A large crowd watched the competition and interest was keen throughout. Sixty-four bowlers took part, including thirty-four from Victoria, eleven from Burnside, eighteen from Nanaimo and one from the C.P.R.

In the first half of the final Ewens took an early lead, but Johnston put up a strong rally to take a well-deserved victory. Bob Dewar, the defending champion, lost his first round match to Dawson, Victoria, 15-10. Results follow.

CANADIAN FLASH LOSES TO GUNTHER IN EXCITING RACE

Famous Spurt of Defending Champion in Classic Diamond Sculls Falls Him in Final—Wright Makes Great Challenge in Last Drive, But Falls Short of Win

Thames Rowing Club Scores Double Victory at Regatta

HENLEY-ON-THAMES, July 6.—The strong, driving finish that carried Joe Wright, of Toronto, through his quarter-final and semi-final races failed him in the final today and the Canadian lost the Diamond Sculls he had won last year to L. Gunther, of Holland, by a yard. The time was 8 minutes, 43 seconds.

Gunther, after leading almost throughout, began to tire in the last part of the race and the Canadian himself beginning to feel the effects of the struggle, set out to overhaul him. As he had done successfully with his clubmate, Jack Guest, and J. Bradley, of Cambridge.

The Dutchman's lead of a length and three-quarters fast diminished by the Canadian's challenge, but Gunther had sufficient stamina left to keep his shell in front at the finish.

Canada's victories in this premier amateur sculling classic remain at two—those of Wright last year and of Lou Scholes, also of Toronto, in 1904 in 8 minutes 35 seconds.

The new Diamond Sculls holder is the strongest man Holland has sent to Henley since Ryken won the sculls in 1921. He went as far as the semi-final of the single sculls championship of last year's Olympic games, losing there to Ken Myers, of the United States.

The Dutchman is the third of his race to win the sculls. Before Holland's 1921 victory, J. Conn had captured the premier amateur single sculls honor in 1895.

WRIGHT EXHAUSTED

After the race Gunther injured in his shell mentioning congratulations to Wright had gone into the boathouse. The Dutchman was carried shoulder high amid a forest of waving hands. But there were many rounds of cheers for the Canadian as he was assisted to the boathouse, utterly exhausted. He had to seek and rest there for a few minutes.

Wright rowed 35 against Gunther's 37½ strokes in the first minute. They raced level up to the island and were still level at the quarter mile. Remenham Barrier was reached in 2 33.

Gunther then went ahead a few feet further. He increased his lead to half a length at the half-mile point and was three-quarters of a length in front when Pawley was reached in 4 08.

Gunther then came over to Wright's side of the course but Wright fressed and drove him back to his own station. Gunther sculled at 31 strokes a minute to Wright's 36, and the Dutchman increased his lead to one length at the three-quarter mile point.

Gunther was sculling beautifully. He continued to draw ahead and at the mile post was a length and a half in front of Wright. The Dutchman tried to increase his lead but was obviously tiring rapidly.

Wright made his greatest effort during the endeavour and gained rapidly on Gunther. A few yards from the winning post the Canadian made one of the most magnificent finishing sports he has put on, but Gunther still drove to keep the lead of his shell a yard in front of the fast-coming Wright.

The time was 32 seconds slower than the record held by F. E. Kelly, of London, 8 minutes 10 seconds.

The final was a most thrilling race. F. P. Pittman, chairman of the regatta, presented, and Jack Guest, was given a front seat in the umpire's launch.

TRINITY TEAM WINS

The first Trinity team defeated University College, Oxford, by half a length in the finals of the Ladies' Challenge Plate for eight-oared teams. Trinity's time was 7 minutes 16 seconds.

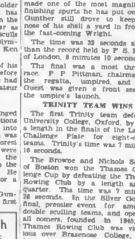
The Browne and Nichols School of Boston won the Thames Challenge Cup by defeating the Thames Rowing Club by a length and a half. The time was 7 minutes 28 seconds. In the Silver Goblets final, premier event for amateur double sculling teams, and open to all comers, founded in 1845, the Thames Rowing Club was victorious over Brasenose College, Oxford, by a length and three-quarters, the time was 8 minutes 22 seconds. The third team of Trinity, Cambridge, defeated Trinity Hall, Cambridge, by a length and a half for the Visitors' Challenge Cup, an event for four-oared teams from British schools and colleges. The time was 7 minutes 45 seconds.

The Thames Rowing Club registered another victory in the Wyfold Challenge Cup race for four-oared teams nonmembers of the Bleswards' Club, defeating Christ's College, Cambridge, by a length. The winner's time was 8 minutes 44 seconds. The Bleswards' Challenge Cup went to the first Trinity team, Cambridge, who defeated London Rowing Club by a length in amateur four-oared revers event. Time, 7 minutes 33 seconds.

The Leander Rowing Club won the Grand Challenge Trophy, premier event of the week of the Royal Henley Regatta by defeating the Thames Rowing Club, 1928 winners of the famous all-comers' event by two lengths.

Leander's time was 7 minutes, which was four seconds slower than the time last year when Thames Rowing Club defeated First Trinity College Club, Cambridge.

Subject is Taboo With Judge K. M. Landis



By AL DEMAREE
(Former Pitcher New York Giants)

Outside of a ball game and of course M. Landis, the high commissioner of baseball, I'm a good guy.

At the slightest excuse he will change the subject at hand to bring up his favorite topic and remarks on his golf triumphs and defeats.

Once I was consulting with him on something I considered of great importance to myself. He listened so solemnly and patiently while I was telling my story and then, when I expected words of wisdom and encouragement, he turned from the subject in answer to my questions he dreaded most.

"Say, Demaree, did you ever try driving a niblick for approaches to the green from distances of a hundred yards or more?"

But the Judge is a real golfer and subject to a golfer's psychology.

One day when playing with George Ade and all being even on the seventeenth hole, Ade remarked casually, "Have you seen your friend, Nan Johnson, lately?"

Needless to say, Ade finished one up!

Baseball Civil War Looming in National

Wilson-Kolp Battle May Lead to Outbreak of Hostilities—Red's Manager Says Something May Be Doing When Teams Meet Again

NEW YORK, July 8.—Possibility of a baseball civil war a feature of the game leaking since the days when the hands and spikes of the old Baltimore Orioles were against every man and every man against them, has loomed on the National League Western front as an aftermath of hot words and flying fists at Chicago July 4.

When Lewis (Hack) Wilson, slugger of the Cubs, attempted to slug Ray Kolp of the Reds, he started something in baseball. Kolp, who is called "Windy" by his teammates on account of his peculiar technique as a baseball pitcher, one who fades to fellow players, so irritated Wilson that he left first base to attempt to offer a rebuttal with his fists.

President John A. Heydler today imposed a fine of $100 and suspension of three days on Wilson, reprimanding the player by inferring "Whatever your provocation may have been, you were not justified in leaving your base during the game to take the law into your own hands. Your actions might easily have started a riot."

Wilson, later in a railway station, found a player he could hit in the person of Pete Donohue, Cincinnati pitcher. This incident had no influence on the presidential fine however. In the second game of the doubleheader Wilson-Kolp battle, Roger Hornsby, Reds' manager, was charged by the Reds of inflicting an intentional injury on Hornsby Cole, Reds' outfielder, when Hornsby, who was in the game with disappointing results, was thrown out by the Cincinnati players, some of whom are his partisans, when he left the game.

"When the Cubs come here (Cincinnati) for a double header August 25 there will be something doing for a certainty." The Red manager discussed the Cubs' chances for the championship suggesting "They will win under strong opposition," strong words in baseball, where reflection on a team's courage is the most deadly of insults.

The evidence of strong feeling between the two clubs suggests excitement in the pennant race, although that seems a long time to wait.

WORLD'S MARATHON RECORD SHATTERED

H. Payne Cats Two Minutes From Former Mark in British Amateur Meet

LONDON, July 8.—A new record for the regular marathon distance of 26 miles 385 yards was set by H. Payne of Wanderer, when he won this event in the British Amateur Athletic Association championship meet yesterday. Payne covered the course in 2 hours 36 minutes 37.3-5 seconds. The previous record of 2 22 24.6-5 was set by the great Finn, Hannes Kohlemainen, in the 1924 Olympic games. The time in the Sun Olympic marathon by El Quali, of France, was 2 32.57.

S. Perrie, of the Royal Air Force, was second in 2 39 1-3, and J. Leatherland, Bolton-in-Ashfield, third in 2 40 32.

The final of the two miles was captured by Wand, of Wood Green. He won the event last year.

GREAT BISLEY RIFLE MEET WILL OPEN TOMORROW

3,000 Marksmen Will Compete in Historic British Empire Meet

Canadian Team One of Strongest of Overseas Contingents—King's Prize, Cups and $40,000 Will Be Distributed

BISLEY CAMP, England, July 6—With nearly 3,000 expert marksmen present from all parts of the British Empire, everything is complete for the opening on Monday of the great meeting of the National Rifle Association. After months of labor the comprehensive programme has been completed, providing matches for all types of small arms—revolver, miniature rifles, sporting guns, service rifles, match rifles and Lewis guns.

The great individual prize is of course the King's Prize, to be decided as usual in three stages.

The qualifying round will be shot over the 200, 500 and 600 yard ranges on July 17; the second stage over the 500, 600 and 600 yard ranges on July 19, and the final stage over the long distance 900 and 1,000 yards on the meet's closing day July 20.

A REAL TEST

The competition provides a real test of marksmanship over short and long ranges, the aggregate across the second and third stages determining the winners. Canada has captured the prize five times, the last occasion being the victory in 1926 of Lieut. Desmond Burke, of Ottawa. Burke has twice since lost the prize by a very slight margin, last year being only three points behind the winner, Lance Corporal A. C. Hale, of Birmingham.

Canada's team, a happy blending of veteran shots, with promising newcomers, is perhaps one of the strongest of the overseas contingents. Others are expected from India, the Channel Islands, Falkland Islands, Trinidad, Ceylon, the Malay States, the Gold Coast, Cyprus, The Straits Settlements, Nigeria, the Sudan, Uganda and Kenya—all the far corners of the Empire.

Never in all the sixty-six years has the meeting seen such a representative imperial gathering. The regret is that Australia is not again represented.

TWO IMPORTANT MATCHES

The Canadians will largely confine themselves to practice in the first week, taking part only in the occasional competition. Intensive shooting so far as they are concerned, will not set in until next Friday when the Donegal and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle service matches are scheduled.

Altogether well over half a million cartridges will be fired during the fortnight and cups valued at $40,000 along with money prizes totaling $40,000 will be offered.

HELEN OUTSAILS H. GOLBY'S TERN

Two Dinghys Race at Cadboro Bay in Second of Series for This Class

Only two dinghys competed in the second sailing race of the series at the Royal Victoria Yacht Club yesterday afternoon. There are still quite a number of these craft over in Vancouver, where they have been competing in the Pacific International Yachting Association results.

The two dinghys were Miss Helen Lindsay's Helen, sailed by Major W. W. Rowson, secretary of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, and H. Golby's Tern, which has been fitted with a new suit of sails this year and which was sailed yesterday by T. Golby. Helen beat Tern by 8½ mins. There was a light air from the nor'east, which freshened slightly towards the end of the race.

The race was twice round the triangular course in Cadboro Bay. The starting line was level with the clubhouse, the first mark being a buoy off Flower Island and the second a buoy off Cadboro Bay Hotel. F O'Reilly acted as starter.

Helen rounded the line a minute ahead of Tern in the first lap and gradually increased her lead as the race continued. A certain amount of short tacking was necessary but, in the main, the beat to the first mark was made on the starboard tack. Off Flower Island the dinghys jibed and ran free to the second mark, the last stretch being sailed into the teeth of the wind and necessitating a good deal of tacking. Helen rounded the first round of the course in exactly 42 mins. She finished the race in 87 mins. 30 secs.

Many U.S. Track Stars to Attend Vancouver Meet

SEATTLE, July 6 — Bert Davidson, British Columbia Amateur Athletic Union official, announced here today that several of the greatest track and field athletes in the United States will compete in Vancouver, B.C., and Seattle this month. Davidson passed through Seattle on his way to Vancouver from Denver, where he said he arranged with the leading amateur stars to visit the Pacific Northwest.

Tern finished in 75 mins. At one point in the race Helen's goosenecks carried away from the ratchet of her roller reefing gear.

Foxx and Herman Still Show Way for Batters

Former Leads American League and Latter National—Lefty Grove and Burleigh Grimes Are Leading Pitchers—Ott Leads in Triples

CHICAGO, July 6.—The banned ball in the American League operated by Jimmy Foxx, Philadelphia first baseman, was increasingly effective and Connie Mack's versatile workman led the junior major circuit for the sixth consecutive week with an average of .410, unofficial figures indicating games of Wednesday reveal.

Foxx lacked five points on 50 his mark to remain at the top, while Bob Fothergill, of Detroit, picked up four points and stayed in second position with a mark of .397. Harry Heilmann, another Tiger, who figured on leading the American League hitting odd years, climbed into the first ten for the first time of the season with .351. Other leaders besides Foxx and Fothergill, were: Manush, St. Louis, .386; Simmons, New York, .372; Simmons, Philadelphia, .367; Cochrane, Philadelphia, .361; Fonseca, Cleveland, .358; Gehringer, Detroit, .352; Heilmann, Detroit, .351; Combs, New York, .351.

As a team the Athletics did not hit quite so hard during the week but remained in the lead with an average of .312, a four-point drop. The Tigers improved by two points to .308 and remained in second position. The Athletics had scored a season total of 457 runs while holding opponents to 373.

The Yankees, due largely to the revival of Babe Ruth's activity had collected sixty-eight home runs to sixty-two for the Athletics.

GROVE IN LEAD

Although Bob Grove had his only start of the week, he continued to set the pace for pitchers working in turn. The Athletics sculptor has twelve victories and two defeats. His best—handed lammasts Pete Walberg, ranked second with twelve wins and three defeats by winning two games. Eddie Rommel worked in two games but failed to add to his season mark which stood at six victories and no defeats.

The Yankees and Washington were tied for the leadership in team fielding with an average of .979. The Athletics, who led last week dropped into a tie for second with the St. Louis Browns at .978.

Other leaders: Ruth batted in Simmons, Philadelphia, 81; homeruns, Gehrig, New York, 31; runs scored, Gehringer, Detroit, 72; triples, Miller, Philadelphia, 8; doubles, Heilmann, Detroit, 39; stolen bases, Gehringer, Detroit, 12; triple plays, Chicago and New York, 1; unit, double plays, Cleveland, 16; sixties-mile, Grove, Philadelphia, 59.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Babe Herman, of Brooklyn, continues to set the pace for National League batsmen, this time with an average of .365 according to figures released today and including games of last Wednesday. Frank O'Doul, of Philadelphia, however, has jumped ranks Herman for first place. Bill Terry, of New York, standing second with .373, with O'Doul standing in a tie for third with Frank Frisch, of St. Louis; each of the two has .363. Paul Waner, of Pittsburgh, added thirty points to his average in the week ending Wednesday, running his mark to .362, his highest of the season to date. Other leading regular batsmen are Stephen, Chicago, .356; Roush, New York, .353; Hendrick, Brooklyn, .347; L. Waner, Pittsburgh, .344; and Cuyler, Chicago, .343.

OTT STANDS OUT

Melvin Ott, of New York, holds the triple honor of leading in home runs with 23 and in runs scored with 73, and in runs batted in with 85. His teammate, Bill Terry, has the greatest total of hits, 112, while Frank Frisch leads with 23 doubles, Lloyd Waner, of Pittsburgh, leads in triples with 11, while Kiki Cuyler, of Chicago, has stolen 23 bases, the best mark in base running to date.

Burleigh Grimes remains in the vanguard of the pitchers, this time with thirteen victories against one defeat for a mark of .928. He also leads in total winnings pitched with 147 Guy Bush, the Chicago ace, went two out of eleven for .908. John Morrison has won four decisions in his salvage work for the Brooklyn team and has taken one other game as a starting pitcher with no defeats charged against him; but of course, ratios yet be regarded as a regular.

The Giants lead in team batting this week with a mark of .308 followed by the Pirates who are hitting .304, the Phillies are right behind with .304 and the Cubs have .298. The Giants also lead in team fielding with .973, one point more than the Cubs.

LACROSSE TEAMS TO START SERIES

Oaklands and South Park Aggregations Will Meet Tuesday in First Game for City Championship

Oaklands and South Park lacrosse teams will clash Tuesday night at Oak Bay when the first game of a series in the first of a series of five games to decide the city senior lacrosse championship. The winner of the series will take the Mainland lifebelt for the British Columbia championship.

Both sounds are made up of the city's most formidable senior outfits and the lovers of Canadian national pastime, which is said traveling to the enclosure, are sure to come to stay as been and seen in recent years. Organized this year, Oaklands have done exceptionally well in the loop and are expected to give South Saltman and his band a run for their money before the title is decided.

The South Park crew, under the guidance of Bill Fraser, includes such well-known athletes as Claude and Darrell Bassett, Oil Marshall, Jimmy Petch, "Sussy" Brown, Bobby Elliott and Charley Hardy, a former Regina player. In Fraser's last appearance against the Boys of Canada he scored six goals and Hardy assisted in every one.

RACE IS TO BE SAILED AGAIN

Two-Stickers and Cruising Sloops Will Compete at Cowichan Bay in Few Weeks' Time

MANY LOCAL YACHTS VISIT ENGLISH BAY

Thirty boats, divided into three distinct classes, took part in the race which started across the Gulf from the Gossip Only Island bell buoy off Active Pass, on Sunday. The race for two of the classes will be sailed again at Cowichan Bay during the Labor Day cruise. This arises from the fact that these two classes failed to finish the course before sunset.

The four special sloops of the three meter class which sailed in this race for the special trophy, donated by the Vancouver Sloop Exchange, on the other hand, managed to finish the course within the scheduled time, since this type of craft seem capable of maintaining its way despite the most absolute calm.

The very light air in which the race started was just enough to make the sails draw and allowed to fall lighter as the day went on that it became necessary for the classes for yawls and ketches, competing for the Sir Thomas Lipton special trophy, fifteen two-stickers, to abandon the race which was Barnaby yawl, Meanina, which won the Victoria Day race on July 24. The second class which will recall the race at Cowichan, was composed of seven cruising sloops, among them Commodore Jack Dick's Anthere. Major W. H. Langley's Kanuka and Mr. Orson Lake's Joy. The starting gun fired punctually at 3.28 p.m. and the prevailing calm will be understood when it is said that seven of these craft did not get back to Vancouver until 9 o'clock the first Monday morning.

A large number of boats from the Royal Victoria Yacht Club filed entries for the regatta. R. F. Brandy, N. F. Blandy and W. T. M. Barrett represented Victoria in the star class. F. J. O'Reilly and B. B. Smith were regular officials. Vice Commodore Major Garrard took timing duty on account of rain. Commodore F. A. Lindsay's Aileen had a large party on board, including Fleet Captain Robertson.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Easton were there in the Roadline, and Captain J. W. Troup took advantage of their completed steam yacht, Cruiser. On board were Mrs. Troup and a large party. C. F. Payne, with Mrs. Payne and a party of friends, arrived in the ketch Saturma, one of the best known yachts in these waters. H. L. Johnson, a recently joined member of the club, was skipper in the Pat; Captain Arthur Lane, in Sokoin, and E. D. Todd and party in Ethel M. II.

The duplicity of the heavy sluggers was maintained only by Ruth and Lou Gehrig each of whom hit one thin single in St. Louis Jimmy Foxx remained in the lead, but his average dropped to .407

Henri Cochet Wins British Net Title In Decisive Style

Defeats Jean Borotra in Straight Sets—Americans Win Men's Doubles—Women's Doubles Stays in England

WIMBLEDON, Eng., July 6—Henri Cochet of France, won the British tennis championship today by defeating his countryman, Jean Borotra in the final match. Cochet overwhelmed the bounding Basque to win in straight sets by scores of 6-4, 6-3, 6-4. Cochet, who won the same title in 1927, captured the crown this year in one of the most impressive displays of tennis ever seen on the courts of Wimbledon.

HENRI COCHET

Bill Tilden and Borotra, two of the greatest players of the day were smothered by him in three straight sets, the American getting but ten games and the Basque but eleven.

Cochet also holds the American championship, won last year.

Cochet won the title before a capacity crowd of more than 15,000 persons today.

Great Britain could capture only one of her five coveted tennis titles in the tournament.

In a terrific five-set battle on courts made slippery by intermittent rain young Johnny Van Ryn, of Tampa, N.J., former Princeton tennis captain, and his blonde partner from Austin, Texas, Wilmer Allison, finally triumphed over the powerful British Davis Cup pair of J. C. Crawford and I. G. Collins, to win the final for the men's doubles by scores of 6-4, 5-7, 6-3, 10-12, 8-6.

Miss Helen Wills, serene in the possession of her third Wimbledon singles crown gained yesterday, sailed forth later in the afternoon paired with the veteran, Francis T. Hunter, and captured the mixed doubles championship. Miss Wills and Hunter won in decisive fashion from Collins and Miss Joan Fry of Britain by scores of 6-1, 6-4.

ENGLAND WINS DOUBLES

France and England divided the other two titles, Henri Cochet overwhelming the bounding Basque together with Jean Borotra, and England's team of Mrs Phoebe Watson and Mrs. Peggy Saunders Mitchell retaining the women's doubles supremacy by downing Mrs Phyllis Covell and Mrs. Dorothy Shepherd Barton, 6-4, 6-8, in the final round.

Most of the tennis fireworks on this rainy and wintery day came in the memorable five-set fight in which Van Ryn and Allison carried away on their youthful shoulders on they first invasion of Europe one of the most cherished titles known to the game. The issue was in doubt until the very last ball crashed into the net from a British racquet and sent Van Ryn and Allison, exhausted, but elated leaping over the net to receive congratulations from the pair of rugged Britons.

Gregory built more like a heavyweight prize fighter than the usual tennis star, and Collins, a tall, lank black haired Scot, presented a great contrast to the trim little Americans.

SINGLES COLORLESS

The men's singles final was colorless by comparison, with Cochet's effortless style easily mastering Borotra's spectacular acrobatics. After a stubborn fight over the first six games of the opening set, the Basque never seriously threatened the subtle Cochet's chances to repeat his victory of two years ago. Now Cochet, Borotra and Rene Lacoste each have won two Wimbledon singles titles in a French monopoly that has covered the last six years.

Although England managed to keep at home only two women's doubles crown, she showed considerable strength in this department, and all four finalists are to be members of the British Wightman Cup team, competing in America later in the Summer.

Sustains Broken Collarbone in Cricket Match With Five C's at Beacon Hill—Days Best Wickets

LETHABY'S XI DOWNS COWICHAN

An injury early in the game between Albions and Five C's overshadowed the pleasure of the game at Beacon Hill yesterday. E. Parsons fell while running and sustained a broken collarbone, necessitating medical attention.

The Albions were all out for 125, of which Enoch made forty-seven runs. Five C's had no difficulty in obtaining the runs with the loss of only seven wickets.

Eric Quainton took five wickets for twenty-nine, and Barker three wickets for twenty runs.

The Day team beat the Night XI at Cranmore Road early. Night started well, with only four wickets down for sixty-one. They looked as if they would set their rivals a high score to challenge. Good bowling by Levien, who took five wickets for thirty runs, engineered the collapse of the Nights, who closed prematurely for only ninety-eight runs. Days knocked off the runs with five wickets to spare and then continued to play until dark.

An extremely good match between Lethaby's XI and Cowichan ended in a draw, at 6 o'clock, according to agreement. Collett batted extremely well. Bains bowled well for Cowichan, while Copeman, Barkley and Duplop were effective with the ball. Scores follow:

Capitals Win and Draw Against Visiting Tribe

Local Crew Takes Afternoon Ball Fixture by Eighth Inning Rally and Battle to 4-4 Score in Nightcap—Forbes Hit Homer

QUAMISH Indians, of the Senior "B" Division of the North Shore League on the Mainland lived up to their reputation as being a snappy outfit, but not too hot, yesterday in a twin bill against the Victoria Capitals at last year's provincial titleholders, when they lost the afternoon attraction at the Royal Athletic Park 6-7 and fought to a 4-4 deadlock in the nightcap, after an eleven-inning battle.

Three runs in the eighth frame spelled defeat for the visiting crew in the afternoon game after they had run up a six-run lead in the first five innings. Gallagher, who started on the rubber for the Mainlanders, went daisy pitrolling in the first of the sixth, after the Indians had taken a substantial lead and looked like having the battle tucked away in their dugout. Lindsay, who replaced him, was pickings for the local tribe, and Norm Forbes, the first man to face him, clouted one of his offerings over the centerfield netting for all four bases. Cummings' single, followed by Copas, Texas Leagues and Dangerfield's single to centre accounted for two more tallies.

Forbes and Cummings crossed the plate in the next stanza to make things interesting. The fatal inning started with Cummings' drive to left, followed by Copas double, Dangerfield first on an error, and Webster obtained a life in a similar manner and then Forbes trotted to the plate and smacked out a two-bagger to account for the Capitals lead and ultimate victory.

The nightcap affair developed into a pitching duel from the first frame to the eleventh, when Umpire McGregor ended it on account of darkness. Gallagher, on the hillock for the visitors, was in rare form, and ten local swatsmen returned to the dugout after swinging at three called strikes. On the other hand Norm Forbes, first string chucker for the Caps, was equally good, if not slightly better, when he whiffed eleven batters and allowed ten bingles, the same as his opponent.

The Caps scored one in the initial frame and an additional three in the fifth, while the visitors tallied one in the third and three in the seventh by bunching their hits coupled with an occasional fumble. Luck was against Forbes, and the Caps should easily have captured the tussle but for six errors chalked up by his teammates. Hoskins and Cummings were guilty of six apiece while McKenzie accounted for one and Tommy Forbes the other.

Art Gallagher, who guarded right field for the Indians, led the offense supremely in the first game by getting four out of five, while Norm Forbes annexed the local honors by connecting for three out of four trips. J. Gallagher, Shillingsford and Nehanes got two hits apiece in the nightcap for Squamish, and Dunn and Hoskins led the Caps with the same number of hits.

Gilbert Hall Wins Way to Finals in Clay Court Tennis

INDIANAPOLIS, July 6.—Improving his game steadily against a gradually fading opponent, J. Gilbert Hall, South Orange, N.J., today entered the final round of the National Clay Court tennis singles championship tournament by defeating Berkeley Ball, Austin, Texas, in a five-set match. The scores were 8-3, 1-6, 3-6, 6-1, 6-3.

Bryant M. Grant, little Atlanta, Ga., player, and Emmett Parr, of Chicago, lapped balls at one another for nearly four hours without determining the other semi-final match, rain finally stopping it with the Southerner on the verge of victory but badly spent. Grant won the first two sets, 6-3, 8-6; lost the third, 4-6, and was leading in the overtime fourth, 8-8, when it rained

CAPITOL OFFERS BROADWAY BABIES

Spirit of Great White Way Caught in Film Version of Musical Comedy Showing Tomorrow

The gay scenes in a musical comedy theatre on Broadway, a gaze flight to death on a side street in New York, the rehearsal hall where big productions are born, a theatrical boarding house—all these are brought vividly to the screen in "Broadway Babies," a singing, talking and dancing picture which stars Alice White at the Capitol Theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

"Broadway Babies" is a First National Vitaphone production, with dialogue and music throughout. Special musical numbers, written just for the picture, including "Broadway Baby Dells," the theme song; "Jig Jig Jiggles," a snappy dancing number which Miss White sings, and "Wishing and Waiting for Love," another fast moving dancing number.

A chorus of fifty dancing girls is seen in the musical comedy scenes with Miss White, and the splendid Vitaphone orchestra, directed by Louis Silvers, provided the music.

The story is adapted from Jay Gelzer's novelette, "Broadway Musketeers," and tells the experiences of three little dancing girls on the Great White Way.

'WINGS,' AIR'S EPIC IS COLISEUM BILL

Wonder Wartime Story of "Knights of the Clouds" on Screen This Week

All those who are interested in high courage, the bravery of unselfish and unheeding youth, the splendor of youthful sacrifice and beauty of human comradeship should go to see "Wings" at the Coliseum Theatre this week. It is a film setting forth the work of the young knights of the clouds in the war. But it is far more than a film. It is an epic of fearless young manhood, a paean of tribute to the airmen, "whose wings are folded forever"—as a beautiful phrase of dedication says—and it is also an amazing example of what can be achieved in the air.

The story is one of genuine drama, rich with the finest qualities that lie at the basis of the friendships of youth, and touched with infinite beauty of romance, which runs through it like a silver thread in a purple pall. For it is also essentially a picture of war, of sacrifice, of stern conflict, of the ultimate test of human endurance and human conquest over fear. Those who have no knowledge of aviation—and they constitute the very great majority of theatregoers—as of the general public—will marvel as to the astounding scenes and the phenomenal camera work in scenes which are amplified by mechanical means into an image it almost seems as if you were part and parcel of the vivid drama you are beholding.

DIFFERENT DESERT PICTURE FEATURED

"The Desired Woman," Showing at Columbia Monday, Is Unique Production

A desert picture which is different from all other desert pictures, a story of burning intensity, "The Desired Woman," showing Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Columbia Theatre, tells the story of a cultured English woman, who accompanies her husband to a desert outpost in India, of which he is commandant. A youth from home is sent to the desolate camp and is at once the cause of jealousy on the part of the brutal leader. A desert-crazed lover of the lady attacks the youth, who in self-defence is compelled to shoot him. For this he is sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.

This after Lady Diana had urged him to escape from the tortures of her husband and consented to go with him back to England.

Miss Rich's portrayal of the captivating and impulsive Lady Diana is the best of her career. William Russell and William Collier, Jr., give fine performances.

Education Through Film

Carrying out a project for education through the cinematograph, initiated before the World War but delayed by that cataclysm, the Roman Catholic Church authorities in Berlin are having constructed a theatre seating 380 persons for the purpose of showing pictures of a religious and instructive nature. In reporting this fact, Berlin papers explain how the present U.F.A. theatre in Nollendorfplatz was built by an Italian, supposed to be backed by the Vatican, and how it had to be sold after the war began, and finally passed into the hands of the Hugenburg interests.

HUMAN EMOTIONS VIBRATE IN FILM

Gripping Picture of Jungle, "A Dangerous Woman," Comes to Dominion Screen Monday

"A Dangerous Woman" is coming to the Dominion Theatre for three days, beginning tomorrow. This is the first African all-talking film with all-talking experienced and stage-experienced actors to appear on any talkie screen. Its background—authentic African atmosphere, dramatic plot, romance, comedy and unparalleled acting.

The story of "A Dangerous Woman" is based upon a tense, absorbing tale of the jungle country by Margery H. Lawrence which appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine. It deals with a modern Russian woman who falls under the dreamy, romantic spell of primeval Africa and turns her love-energies to a savage stalking of all the white men who come within her ken in the outpost village in which she lives. She captures the hearts of each in turn, relinquishing each former victim for the thrill of enamoring a new one.

Baclanova, Russian dramatic artist, formerly with the Moscow Art Theatre, and lately a tremendous success in "The Wolf of Wall Street," plays the title role in her own inimitable exotic manner. Clive Brook, Neil Hamilton and Leslie Fenton are the handsome colonial adventurers who fall captive before the romantic onslaughts of the siren.

Hale Edwards and Clyde Cook give lustably of their talents in producing the comedy-relief.

"A Dangerous Woman" needs nothing more to make it one of the most amazing of audible pictures yet seen at the Dominion Theatre.

BEAUTIFUL SHOW FOR PLAYHOUSE

Gene Stratton-Porter's Idyllic Story of "The Harvester" to Show an Local Screen

The current show at the Playhouse Theatre is one of the finest pieces of movie material that has been to that theatre of late. "The Harvester" is a picture version of the famous novel by Gene Stratton-Porter, and is directed by her son-in-law, J. Leo Meehan.

The role of "The Harvester" is played by Orville Caldwell, who for two years was the Knight in "The Miracle Man." Natalie Kingston is "Ruth" and other members of the cast are Jay Hunt, Lola Todd, Edward Hearn, Will Walling and Fanny Midgley.

Also on the same bill is "Beautiful But Dumb," the new Tiffany-Stahl production, starring Patsy Ruth Miller.

Pathe Sound Reel

The Pathe Sound News Reel is to be issued twice, instead of once, a week. Pathe has a fleet of trucks equipped with sound recording cameras for making sound news. Pathe sound pictures are said to have been shown recently in Shanghai.

EMPIRE'S STORY IN TALKIE FILM

Big Spectacle of Peace and War Planned by British Company

Talking film production in Australia, South Africa, Canada and India is the ambitious scheme embarked on by British and Dominion Films, in conjunction with the Gramophone Company.

The first picture will be "The Trail of the Southern Cross," which deals with the history and romance of Australia up to the Great War, and the undying part played by her at Gallipoli.

Official support has been promised by the Australian authorities, and the Western Electric system of sound recording will be used.

Its military history, from the founding of the Regiment of Adelaide to her rally to the flag in the Great War, and the mighty romance of lumber, will be the subject-matter of the story selected to show Canada's history and backgrounds.

The scenes will be actually shot in Canada, and in their natural settings with sound equipment.

The story of South Africa will deal with its history, the romance of the diamond mines, and the Empire-building part played by Cecil Rhodes. As in and it will show South Africa's loyal duty to the flag in the Great War.

A magnificent spectacle in color and sound, entitled "Taj Mahal," will form the basis of the story of India. Exceptional facilities have been promised by the Indian authorities.

Each Dominion will thus have an opportunity of seeing the birth, history and development of its sister Dominions, while English-speaking nations will be able to see and hear a true picture of the birth and progress of the British Empire.

Rod La Rocque Has Difficult Choice

"The One Woman Idea," with Rod La Rocque, is the story of an Eastern prince who finds himself in a position where he must choose between a harem and the one woman idea. The locale of the film is divided between the decks and saloons of a Mediterranean steamship and the streets and palaces of Persia. Marceline Day plays the dual role of a fashionable English woman and a Persian half-caste. Sharon Lynn and Sally Phipps are supporting players in this Fox production.

Charles (Buddy) Rogers and Clara Bow in "Wings," the Feature Attraction at the Coliseum Theatre.

Yokel With Prize Voice Now in Filmdom

Donald Novis, the country yokel in "Bulldog Drummond," who sings to the innkeeper's daughter and who has received so much favorable mention for his brief film appearance, is a resident of Pasadena, Cal., and was the winner last year of the $5,000 prize offered by the Atwater Kent Radio Company for the best young man's voice in the United States. The song in the picture is "There's the One Of Me," composed by Harry Akst and Jack Yellen.

Doug and Mary in Shakespearean Talkies

Not only have Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford obtained Constance Collier as a vocal coach for their forthcoming talking screen production of "The Taming of the Shrew," but they have also selected the supporting players. Edwin Maxwell will play the part of Baptista, Dorothy Jordan that of Bianca, Geoffrey Wardwell will be Hortensio, Joseph Cawthorne, Gremio, and Clyde Cook will appear as Grumio.

Opera Star for Talkies

Yet another example of the enterprise of the talkie makers is the fact that Titta Ruffo, the famous Italian baritone, has severed his connection with the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York in order to make some singing films. It is safe to surmise that in the course of a few months British cine-goers will have the opportunity of hearing this world-famous voice from a seat in their local cinema for an outlay of, say, 3s 6d.

"Louisiana Lou"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has obtained the services of Arthur Freeman, who wrote the music for "No, No, Nanette" and "Hit the Deck," to supervise the production of his own film story, "Louisiana Lou," the stage production of the same name will open in Philadelphia next month.

Mrs Smith—My husband tells me the other men at the club wonder at Mr Browne quite a raconteur.

BRITAIN BUYS RUSSIAN FILMS

London Firm Acquires Distribution Rights of Pictures Made in Soviet

The right to distribute in Britain the entire output of the Russian film industry has been acquired by the British Instructional Films, Limited, it is announced from London.

A. E. Bundy, chairman of the company, said that every Russian film suitable for exhibition in other countries will be submitted to his company and distributed if passed.

Mr. Bundy considers the Soviet productions excellent work.

"The British film industry is now helped by relaxation of regulations prohibiting taking films of London streets and parks. Immediate facilities are being given to complete the "Lure of the Atlantic" a film in which Prince Henry and Mrs Alan Brown-Alcock flight are laid in London.

Tom Mix Tells One Just a Little Better

An amazing story is going the rounds concerning Tom Mix, the film actor. One day recently he had to quit for a while the comforts of Hollywood and proceed to a part of Arizona far from railways, where life was still more or less primitive, in order to take part in one of his many cowboy pictures. On his return he brought with him a number of leather visiting cards, each embossed with his name and address.

"Whatever did you have those cards made for?" inquired a friend.

"Oh," said Tom carelessly, "everybody who values his life carries leather visiting cards in the part of Arizona I've just come from."

"But why?" persisted his friend.

"Because out there if you give a man your card, and he doesn't like you, he lears it up and then shoots you. If you use a leather one, you can shoot him while he's trying to tear it."

"Cockney Suite" To Be Feature Of Band Concert

After missing last Sunday because of a regimental bring in camp at Maple Bay, the 16th Canadian Scottish band will again have charge of the programme this afternoon.

An exceptionally fine programme has been arranged, of which the feature will be "A Cockney Suite," entitled "Cameos of London Life." This suite is by Keteltby, the composer of "In a Monastery Garden," "Persian Market," "In a Chinese Temple Garden," "Algerian Song" and many other very notable successes.

The suite is of five numbers, the first being a state procession to Buckingham, therefore the music is martial and would indicate the sort of march any regimental band would play on such an occasion. The second number is a Cockney serenade, built on the well-known Cockney whistle, "Art a Pint of Mild and Bitter." The third number is jazz effect, featuring the sudden change of key that is common in jazz music. The fourth number is meant to represent the serious thoughts that would occur to anyone on passing the Cenotaph in Whitehall. The fifth number is meant to represent bank holiday on Hampstead Heath. A synopsis of this suite will be printed on the programme issued in the park.

Other numbers are a selectom on Bourses' Popular Songs, a selection from DeKoven's comic opera, "Robin Hood," Down South, and Anderson sketch, and many other popular numbers.

Hollywood's Latest

An immense soundproof structure, 225 feet long, 132 feet wide and seventy-three feet high is being erected in the United Artists studio in Hollywood. It has a stage within itself, a permanent theatre to be used in photoplaying and recording productions that require stage atmosphere. This theatre has a large organ besides the regular auditorium accessories.

First Artist—Old Bailey wouldn't buy my pictures—wouldn't even look at them.

Second Ditto—Well, he was more considerate of your feelings than of mine—he refused to buy my pictures even after he looked at them.

BEATS ENGLISHMEN TO PLAY'S LAUGHS

New York Audience Sees Funny Spots of British Plays Ahead of Schedule

When "Journey's End," the impressive war play by R. C. Sherriff, was brought to New York there was much doubt as to the advisability of retaining all of its humor for the American presentation. Most of the comedy relief is distinctly British in tone, and there was some fear as to the ability of American audiences to get on to it. It was finally decided, however, that the humor be kept, and playgoers have justified the faith in their perspicacity.

People connected with the production say that the play goes almost twice as many laughs here as it did on the other side, and that New Yorkers laugh on the average a full line ahead of their English contemporaries at any given point. This quick understanding on the part of Americans caused some embarrassment at first. The British, in the cast's London tryout, would always wait until the completion of a joke before they interrupted with guffaws, and the pauses in action were arranged accordingly. In New York, on the other hand, the laughs came earlier, and sometimes the point itself was lost amid the merriment. After the second performance the pauses were straightened out to allow for the American sense of humor. Many of the lines, especially those delivered by Trevier and Hardy, brought laughs here that were unexpected, judging from the London reception.—New York Times.

The "Road Show"

Charles King and Bessie Love, two of the principals in "The Broadway Melody," will be seen in leading roles in "Road Show," a talking production with a musical setting. The tale is that of a dancer who falls in love with a matinee idol. This actor appears to be virtually indifferent to her existence.

CHAPTER XXVII

"You mean that the leader of the gang is still hiding in the place?" Blicer demanded. "The police are searching every floor."

"Every apartment has been examined," Mr Brezgel confided. "even yours, sir, I am afraid," he added, addressing Mr. X.

"Quite right, too," the latter remarked.

"In my report," Blicer said, "I should like to mention the guests who made such a fine fight. Mr Owston, I know. May I ask this gentleman's name?"

This hotel manager appeared surprised.

"Certainly," he replied, "I thought everyone knew him. This is Mr. Ruben Sams."

"The Argentine millionaire," Blicer murmured.

"Mr Ruben Sams has a suite here," Brezgel added, "and when I regret to say, however, he very seldom makes use."

I suppose my bewilderment was obvious to all of them.

"Major Owston is a little confused, no doubt," Mr X remarked, with a smile. "For some reason he was very curious as to my identity one night lately. By bribing a maitre d'hotel at Claridge's, he discovered that my name card at a dinner party there bore the inscription of 'Mr. X.' Since then he has regarded me with suspicion. The ways of high finance are doubtless unknown to you, Major. For some time, until I collected by board for a new company I am founding, it was very inadvisable that my presence in this country should be known. I often pay visits to foreign capitals under another identity."

"I am quite believe that," I stuttered. I drew Blicer to one side. "Blicer," I said earnestly, "that man is no more Ruben Sams than I am."

The inspector looked at me as though I had taken leave of my senses.

"I am afraid that's rather a mare's nest, Major," he expostulated. "Ruben Sams is known all the world over. Who did you think he was?"

"Joseph," I declared confidently. "I am not mad, Blicer, and I tell you that man is Joseph."

He looked at me with a profound disbelief.

"Come and have a drink, Major," he suggested. "You have had a rough night of it."

"That, I persisted, "is the man who stood on the lawn and led his men when they attacked Brezgel's. He is the man—he admits that—who was entertained as Mr. X at Claridge's, who took such a malicious interest in Miss Kestler and myself. He is the man who came to my rooms in Down Street. He is the man who was seated in the secretary's office at the Blue Rhine, who talked to you over the telephone, and, whether you believe it or not, he led the Wolves tonight. He led them from table to table, where the women were wearing the most wonderful jewels. He had them all marked down. His fighting was a sham. When he fired his gun, he used dummy cartridges, and the men got up again. I picked some of the cartridges up I have two or three in my pocket now."

"Show me one."

I thrust my hand into my pocket. They were gone. Blicer edged away "I think you're wrong, Major," he told me frankly. "Come and have a drink."

"But he talked to me tonight," I insisted. "We've spoken of Miss Kestler."

I knew that I was speaking against a rock of incredibility. Nevertheless, he let me down lightly.

"I tell you what I'll do, Major," he promised "I'll have him watched. He's staying here. I'll send one of our men up within half an hour."

And, with that, he seemed to consider the matter settled.

The next day I played my treasure into the trembling hands of Martin Hews. He set it down in front of him upon the desk and drew aside the purple covering with ravishing fingers. He was like a man whose emotions, so clearly reflected in his face, and generated an almost unendurable physical strain. He sat spellbound, gasping drinking in an amazing happiness, completely oblivious to his surroundings, crooning gently to himself. His fingers wandered lovingly over the exquisite surface. The seconds passed into minutes. Finally, with the sigh of his fingers still resting upon his treasure, he turned towards me.

"Well done, Owston," he acclaimed "Well done! When the news came through of this raid, I trembled. You have brought me the finest present I have got. Now tell me the story."

"It's a pretty serious one, I fear sir," I warned him. "The beginning I was in all right. Isaacs wanted to bargain, but I handed across the cheque. Tul-Kak parted all right, good fellow. He saved my life. but they got him the morning. He was found dead in bed, as I dare say you read."

My employer nodded

"Joseph kept his word as usual. He swore that, if he dealt with me instead of him, he should die before he could cash the cheque."

"He had three men to guard him and locked doors. No good! Joseph's men got at him somehow during the raid. They could never believe that I had fought through to the office, and they imagined that I had hidden in one of the rooms on Tul-Kak's floor. Everyone of them was ransacked last night and torn to pieces."

"They pressed you hard for it" he muttered, with a sparkle in his eyes.

"We had a bit of a scrap in the corridor of the Milan," I told him "Afterwards we rather fooled them. Isaacs went off with the office which they took from him as the corner of the street, and I reached the office safely, with the stained in my trousers pocket Isaacs is all right, by-the-by, I rang him up this morning. They just took the office from him and let him go."

"You are a man, Major," my employer acknowledged humbly. "I did well when I engaged you. Now what about the raid? The papers speak of you as making an heroic resistance, and a Mr Ruben Sams. Who is Ruben Sams?"

"Joseph."

Mr Martin Hews stared at me.

"You're laughing, Major."

"I was weary of repetition, but actually I did my best to combat it. I explained the reasons for my conviction.

"They all believe that he was fighting for the guests," I concluded "Nothing of the sort. He was leading on his gang. He'd marked down every table where the jewels were worth having, and, under pretext of running there to defend the women, he led his men."

"That's a strange story, Major," Martin Hews commented quietly.

"Strange, but it's true," I answered

"You say that he spoke of my piece?"

"I asked him where she was. He refused."

"I think, Major," said my employer, "you have run foul of a man with a sense of humor, and he amuses himself at your expense."

"Perhaps," I sighed. "It always seemed to me that it would be the easiest thing in the world, if I could once find the man whom I knew to be Joseph, to drag the truth out of him, but I can't do it. He's too clever He is always surrounded by other people who are either his confederates, or who believe in him, and he always seems to be in a position to make me ridiculous. I I accuse him seriously I thought inspector Blicer was my friend—I think he is—but he doesn't trust me I begged him to arrest Joseph last night, and he wouldn't do it."

"Tut, tut, Major!"

"That fellow Blicer again!" he muttered. "I wish you'd have away from him. The police are too suspicious of me This house is watched from the front door to the river. Isaacs could have got me some of the real lacquer, taken from the Weindorf Palace in Vienna I dared not take it. There's no harm in your being friendly with Blicer but be very careful, Major. Never let him talk to you of my affairs."

He pressed a button, and Minchin quietly appeared.

"A bottle of my wine," he ordered. "Two glasses. I get tired these days, he went on, speaking as though to himself

"Why don't you chuck it all now, sir?" I asked him. "It has been a great game but is it worth it, after a certain point?"

"It is always worth it," he replied there."

"But look at what you have already," I argued. "You have beautiful things enough to feast your eyes upon for the rest of your life Why run any risks? Why not shap everything to some southern country—Italy, or somewhere among the quieter places where the sun shines. Divide the time between the sunshine and your treasure."

He leaned across the table.

"I shouldn't be safe white Joseph was alive. You know his oath? I got Donkin away and kept the girl here, he swore to steal my treasures, one by one, and then my life. Besides it is the beginning, I suppose My Madonna of Deptford and my Venus of Milo I can't forget. Where else in the world the best I possess myself? I am here?"

"That's all very well, sir," I expostulated, "but the man isn't superhuman. He's beginning to get rattled. He had to get it badly There are fifty-three men of his gang under arrest, some in hospital, the remainder in prison. Seven are dead. His organization must be completely shattered. The police have combed every house for miles around their old headquarters. Don't you think one of these fifty-three is likely to squeal?"

"I don't know some of them know." my employer confided. "They catch a glimpse of the Joseph who comes stealing down into their yields once or twice a year, from believe that I had fought through to the office, and they imagined that I had hidden in one of the rooms on Tul-Kak's floor. Everyone of them was ransacked last night and torn to pieces."

"They pressed you hard for it" he muttered, with a sparkle in his eyes.

On Vancouver Island

He is a member of the Kwakiutl-Nootka tribe of West Coast Indians who have settled in the region which he regards as his own. He accompanied the Governor-General on his recent trip on the Canadian Pacific through the islands and shores of Vancouver Island. The quill through the nose is more reminiscent of the Indians of Africa than the West Coast of Canada, but it shows that strange customs and manners are to be found still in the Dominion.

PIANO RECITAL ON AIR TODAY

Harper's Corners Gets "Hey Hey" Fever — "Midsummer Nightmare" Is Pamela Sketch Title

SOOTHING STRAINS ON LYRIC HOUR

Those hilarious radio sketches: "The Parnassus of Pamela," which have reached listeners through stations of the American Broadcasting Company, are to continue to entertain thousands with their ludicrous situations today, at 1:30 p.m.

The skit is entitled "Midsummer Nightmare" and concerns the unexpected arrival of the colossal bore, Mrs. Schastesky (who has a yen for Ole). She has in her group of faithful adherents Prince Lindoff, the poor but honest nobleman who has chased about after Pamela, more or less, in previous sketches.

Warm, colorful music, the entrancing strains of a waltz, a barcarolle and selections of a like nature have been chosen by Francesco Longo, brilliant conductor of the American Salon Orchestra, for the afternoon broadcast at 2 o'clock. Perdin Kocemba, lyric tenor, will be solo artist during the programme.

When the golden bale of evening has enfolded the countryside and the world is prepared to set aside the cares of the day, the lyric hour is broadcast through stations of the American Broadcasting Company at 9:30 p.m.

Under the direction of Jacques Jou-Jerville, this programme reaches listeners from the Seattle studios of the A.B.C. network.

Sonchetty, soprano, will sing "Le Valvende's "Chavelitas" and "Bacio" by Arditi. The instrumental ensemble will be heard in Primi's "Kaunda Walzer," Drdla's "Serenade," "Aragonaise" by Massenet, and the popular "An Old Violin and An Old Refrain" by Black.

Now that Max Kalz, the principal figure in "The Chronicles of Kalz," is spending his vacation with Harper at the Harper House at Harper's Corners, the citizens of the famed community are making an honest effort to royally entertain the New York boosting artist.

This week's radio skit, it is entitled "Harper's Corners get the 'Hey Hey' Fever" and has to do with an exciting raid on a prominent roadhouse on the outskirts of the village. Max Kalz is no fool, implicated in the proceedings.

MUSICAL NUMBERS

Selections from the works of three German composers of renown, Schubert, Schumann, and Bach, will be presented in the tenth of a series of two-piano recitals given by Mme. Bertha Posney and Myron Jacobson at 6 o'clock this evening, over the A.B.C. network.

Mme. Bertha Posney and Myron Jacobson, after a tour of Europe and America, where each appearance was marked with brilliant success, have created their efforts for the major part in broadcast performances.

The programme, originating in the Seattle studios of the American Broadcasting Company, will open with the two-piece arrangement by Harold Bauer of Schubert's Fantasia in F Minor." Schumann's "Three Etudes in Canon Form," with arrangement by Debussy will follow. The recital will be closed with the "Finale from the Concerto in C Minor" by Bach.

The very last word in modernistic music will be in the hands of the Seattle studios of the American Broadcasting Company at 9:30 p.m. Pacific Standard Time, when Vic Meyers and his Columbia Recording Orchestra provide listeners with a half hour of dance music.

The fact that tribute is being paid on the occasion of his birth centenary to the work of General William Booth by leaders of many denominations recalls a story the general himself was rather fond of telling. A high church dignitary was asked one day what he thought of the Salvation Army. "Well, to tell the truth," said he, "I do not like it, but, to be perfectly candid, I believe God Almighty does."

ANGLO-PERSIANS

Finding inspiration in the realm of opera, the Whitfill Anglo-Persians will present a programme of operatic melodies during the coast-to-coast broadcast this afternoon from 2:30 to 3 o'clock, Pacific standard time.

Expressive with profound beauty the longing of two legendary lovers for their lost love in "Tristan and Isolde" will be the orchestra's numbers, interpreted by tenor under Louis Katzman's direction. Another Wagner selection will be the beautiful "Song to the Evening Star" from the third act of "Tannhauser."

A scene of celestial splendor is Aida's aria in the glorious March from Verdi's "Aida," one of the finest of the radio audience. The hour of Jaroslavsky, Offenbach and Leoncavallo will also express what sweetness will be present.

Gale Kelle directs the orchestra, and Fred Walcker tenor, will sing the vocal choruses. The Studebaker Piano Twins are scheduled again to add zest to the half hour.

Echoes of the earlier days of musical comedy will be heard when "Life and Love," from Victor Herbert's "Velvet Lady" will be broadcast from auditors by the Enna Jettick ensemble during the hour which extends between 9:45 and 9 o'clock tonight. Evangelist to Tell Life Story in "Wandering Jew" Lectures—Three Sermons Today

Dr. Armin A. Holzer, the noted converted Jewish evangelist, who is holding a series of meetings at the Gospel Tabernacle, of which the Rev. Daniel Walker is the pastor, on Yates Street, continues to demonstrate a challenging city-wide attention. His messages both afternoon and evening are drawing large crowds to hear this converted Hebrew expounding the Scriptures.

Tomorrow night he spoke on the "five wise and the five foolish virgins." Dr. Holzer asserted that what our churches are most in need of is not better building, better organization and better singing, but the upper room experience of Pentecost. Dr. Holzer said that he was converted to the faith in Christ over thirty years ago, and because of his faith was cast out of his Jewish home. After his conversion he worked in a coal mine in South Wales and underwent untold sufferings because he would not give up his faith in Christianity.

Today will be a great day in the Tabernacle, when Dr Holzer will speak three times: At 11 o'clock he will speak on "Bringing of God from Eternity to Eternity," and at 7.30 on "The Second Coming of Christ." Sunday school is held in the citadel at 2 o'clock, and parents whose children do not attend elsewhere at this hour during the Summer months are invited to bring or send them. Bend tray classes make the Bible lesson interesting for the very little ones who are received from the age of four years.

Visitation of those sick or shut in will be gladly attended to by a Salvationist in any district if a telephone message is sent to 14138. Week-night meetings are held on Monday, Thursday and Saturday evenings at 8 o'clock. Mrs. Merrett will allow the Catholic hierarchy to designate those priests who fulfill the requirements, and the priests will give liberty of action by the episcopate and freedom for the priests to perform the duties of their office. The church will also have full liberty to give religious instruction within the church precincts though the government regulations continue to forbid religious teaching within public and private schools. The churches continue to be owned by the state and the present arrangement calls for an inventory being taken previous to the church taking them over. Archbishop Ruiz, the papal delegate, states that the negotiations were carried forward in a spirit of goodwill and respect.

It is recognized that the present modus vivendi does not settle the controversy which is more than a century old. The determination of the republic to nationalize the churches and to permit no religious instruction within either public or private schools has been opposed throughout the Catholic Church. The last three years have been marked by much suffering on the part of religionists, and many tragedies. There has been a state of religious rebellion under the name of the Cristero movements, but it is expected that peace will now prevail. The remaining priests in Mexico are released, as well as fifty religious priests in Mexico City, while exiled priests and prelates will be free to return to their country and their work.

After Three Years Of Silence, Church Bells Resume Use

Catholic Church and Mexican Government Have Reached Agreement, With Limitations on Services, and Instruction of Youth—Is Sequel to Dispute Which Engendered Much Bitterness

Modus Vivendi Does Not End Lengthy Controversy

AFTER three years of silence the bells in the Mexican churches will again call the people to worship. After three years of absence the priests will return to minister at the altar, and the Host will be lifted before the kneeling faithful. Many pardons will be issued and nuns and priests who have been suffering imprisonment because they fell foul of the laws of the Republic, are to be released. The stalemate is ended which began on August 1, 1926, when the Mexican Episcopate withdrew the priests in protest against what it termed were unfair restrictions. The action now being taken means that some steps have been taken in settlement of the century-old controversy between the State and the Church in the Republic of Mexico.

President Portes Gil has made public a statement promising three things. The Mexican Government will allow the Catholic hierarchy to designate those priests who fulfill the requirements, and the priests will give liberty of action by the episcopate and freedom for the priests to perform the duties of their office. The church will also have full liberty to give religious instruction within the church precincts though the government regulations continue to forbid religious teaching within public and private schools. The churches continue to be owned by the state and the present arrangement calls for an inventory being taken previous to the church taking them over. Archbishop Ruiz, the papal delegate, states that the negotiations were carried forward in a spirit of goodwill and respect.

STOCK PRICES HOLD DESPITE PROFIT-TAKING

Number of Issues Close a Few Points Lower, but on Whole Gains Slightly More Than Offset Losses

CONVERTIBLE BONDS ADVANCE SHARPLY

NEW YORK, July 6.—The stock market held its ground in a manner highly satisfying to the bull forces today although the hour increase of $227,000,000 in brokers' loans reported last night caused a momentary sinking spell at the opening.

Considerable week-end profit-taking had to be absorbed, and a number of issues closed a few points lower, but the Associated Press price indicated gains slightly more than offset the losses.

The turnover for the two hour session barely exceeded 1,000,000 shares.

Farm implement shares were a conspicuously strong group. Case Threshing was sent up 28 points to a record price at 350. Minneapolis Moline reached new high ground in a moderate gain, and International Harvester and Oliver Farm Equipment mounted about 3 points. Food shares were also well bought. Corn Products and Continental Baking A rating 2 to 6 points to new high peaks. Eastman Kodak was a strong feature shooting up nearly 12 points to 200⅝, getting above the 200 mark for the first time.

Allied Chemical, Peoples Gas, Outler Hammer, International Telephone, Hoe and Company, International Business Machines, Loftus, Simmons, and Youngstown Sheet and Tube were other issues reaching new high prices for the year or longer.

Auburn Auto fell back 12 points, but recovered half its loss. Commercial Solvents lost nearly 9 points. Dupont and National Biscuit lost 3 or 4 points in profit-taking. U.S. Steel, Packard, General Motors Radio and General Electric sagged about a point.

Foreign exchanges were dull and fairly steady, sterling cables holding at $4.86 7-8, and the Japanese yen rallying 1-10 of a cent to 44.70c.

A dull Saturday bond market was enlivened in the last half hour by a sharp rise in convertibles, which finished the short session, with net gains of from half to 5 points. Other issues were irregular, with the investment rails maintaining their firmness.

WHEAT MARKET RISES SHARPLY

DELIVERIES SELL AT NEW HIGH FOR PRESENT MOVE

Prices React With Aggressive Commission House Buying—Crop Reports Pessimistic

(B.C. Sugar Corporation, Ltd.)

CHICAGO, July 6.—The wheat market was sharply higher, early with all deliveries selling at a new high on the present move, and December registering a new high on the crop.

The Canadian Pool issued a report on conditions which was considered as decidedly bullish, both here and at Liverpool, but there was some disposition to take profits and even up over Sunday and, when showers were later reported on both sides of the line in the Northwest, there was aggressive commission house selling and prices reacted more than three cents.

Crop reports from American and Canadian Northwest were again pessimistic, with claims that rain will be of no material benefit in some sections, but the market's advance has been very rapid in the past week, and a good shake out was necessary to make a healthy market. Record receipts were again probably be reported at Southwestern market Monday and we will probably be satisfied to buy wheat at lower prices.

Other grains were influenced largely by the reaction of wheat. Rye appears cheap to us. As suggested last week, we believe these figures will show this year's rye crop the smallest since 1913.

REPORTS ARE ENCOURAGING

Directors of Beaver Silver Mines Better Communication to Property

The directors of the Beaver Silver Mines, Limited, held a meeting on Thursday, which was attended also by the Vancouver mining, Dr. W. H. Turley Brooks and Mr. T. A. Snodgrass.

Reports from the property were considered very encouraging and so strongly indicating that within sixty days receipts from ore shipments would more than meet expenses.

The directors met the Ministry of Mines by appointment in respect of a new road to Beaver Lake, Beaver and other properties on Wallace Mountain. It is expected this new road which will be shorter and much much better grade from the C.P.R. station at Beaverdell to the lake, thus reducing the cost of haulage, will be completed this week.

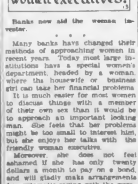
Why large Banks have-



Women executives.

Banks now add the woman investor

Many banks have changed their methods of approaching women in recent years. Today most large institutions have a special women's department, headed by a woman, where the housewife or business girl can take her financial problems.

It is much easier for most women to discuss these things with a member of their own sex than it would be to approach an important looking man. She feels that her problems might be too small to interest him but she enjoys her talks with the friendly woman executive.

Moreover she does not feel ashamed if she has only twenty dollars a month to pay on a bond, and will gladly make arrangements for systematic saving with the woman executive.

WHEAT STRONG AT THE START

SEVERAL FACTORS COMBINE TO RAISE PRICES AT WINNIPEG

Market Technically Stronger for Day's Trading—Coarse Grains Steady

(Branson, Brown & Co. Ltd.)

WINNIPEG, July 6.—Wheat: Strong at the start this morning, prices advancing from 2 3-8 to 4 1-2 cents over Friday's close, based on the Liverpool Cables, close a bullish crop report issued by the Pool and a fair volume of outside buying orders in evidence. The advance however, was only temporary, as longs started to liquidate and evening-up over the week-end a tremendous quantity of long wheat was poured into the pit during the first two hours of trading. With the result that, prices made a drastic decline of 4 1-2 to 5 1-2 cents from the early high marks before the decline was checked.

Rains and showers from very light to about half an inch were more or less general over Saskatchewan and Alberta, and this appeared to be the basis of the general selling. The wheat was fairly well taken on the scale down, and it was believed to have passed into stronger hands, and the market should be technically stronger for today's liquidation.

Liverpool closed 3 5-8 to 4 1-8 higher, when due about unchanged to 1-8 lower. Winnipeg and foreign cables did not bring any export business. Continental buying and Argentine wheat in a large way were the chief factors in the market.

Cash wheat: Local shippers were in the market in large numbers overnight in four and five grades. There was very little change in the cash market, offerings were fair and demands were unchanged to one cent lower. Millers report demand slow for flour. The Pool report showed that the wheat crop of all three provinces had deteriorated rather severely during the past week and that the damage to many areas was permanent. This confirmed private reports that have been coming in daily. American markets also rallied, especially Minneapolis. Rains reported as falling this morning in North and South Dakota. Winnipeg futures closed: July, 1.41 3-8; October, 1.38 1-8; December, 1.35 1-4.

Coarse Grains — These markets lost ground, but were much steadier than wheat. There was some fair buying of July barley, but otherwise there was not much doing. Offerings were light and there was no particular pressure to sell. Closed 2-4 lower, barley 2 up to 3-4 lower and rye unchanged to 3-4 up.

Flax—Cash: Fairly strong 1 up.

PIONEER FIRM IS REORGANIZED

Well Known Real Estate Agency to Be Continued Under New Arrangement

A well-known firm of real estate and insurance agents in Victoria, that of Whitney and Walker, has been reorganized, owing to the death of Mr. Walker, some three months ago. From now on business will be carried on under the same name by Messrs. H. W. Hinder and L. C. Gregory, junior.

The business was started business in Victoria twenty-five years ago with Mr. Whitney as manager. Some five years later Mr. Widers joined the firm as a partner. The original offices were situated on the corner of View and Douglas Streets, on the site now occupied by the Royal Theatre. Later the firm moved to Fort, and again to their present position in the Campbell Building.

Many large deals have passed through the hands of this pioneer firm in the previous years, and they are still in a position to continue their good services to their clients.

Whitney Letter

(Branson, Brown & Co. Ltd.)

NEW YORK, July 6.—Whitney, of the Wall Street Financial Bureau, says: With today's session showing us that the process of internal correction has been completed, we think it Quite we can look forward to the coming week with every assurance that, at least for the greater part of it, we will have further advance and a new crop of record prices in most active issues. The reduction of another 1-8 of 1 per cent in bankers acceptances simply justifies the action taken a month or two last week that you could entirely disregard the Reserve Board in its tempers or flurries in the call rate and, likewise, pay no attention at all to the brokers loans which, while the market is 15 points into new high territory, did not come up to even their recent total.

Time money will undoubtedly follow the lead given it by the acceptance rate and the only thing that left is for the call rate to give in to a lower pressure by making it possible to sell below 6 per cent and possibly, at times, probably, down to a 4 per cent rate.

The food group, under the leadership of Corn Products, has shown its colors and is still sufficiently far down in top to warrant purchases at levels more or less advanced from those you were originally given. Pennick & Ford should be bought between under 87. Petroleum is the low 89's. Continental Baking A and Corn Products even at 10 new highs. Any price around 108, or, for that matter, up to 110, is worth while. Corn Products, as you are certainly going to get between 125 and 130 for it, Indian has started out on sufficient of a move to warrant additional purchases any place under 110, while U.S. Steel is providing us with a last minute opportunity to buy it under 200 before it definitely establishes itself well above that figure. Some time back, and at a level 30 to 35 points lower than current prices, you were advised to buy Union Pacific. Now advise acceptance of profits between here and 300, with the transferees of these funds into Western Union for corresponding profits.

Speaking of taking profits I also advise clinching those in Atlantic Refining between here and 80, as well as those now existing in International Telephone and Telegraph between 110 and 120. Pullman is temporarily a little slow, but do was between 115 and 120 and get it in your list while you can do so around 80. Kennecott and Anaconda still remain in logical purchase territory. The same goes for Anaconda's Foreign Power, which, while it may take a couple more days, should be bought between 115 to 120. On the curb Insurance Shares is the outstanding purchase as it represents a diversified position in the cross section of the field for the best in security markets upon which nobody ever loses money in fire and life and insurance companies, whose stocks are in the field by itself since Shares.

Foreign Bonds, particularly if obtainable under 30 or if not, any place under 35 and up as well as Peru, Chilean under 150 for an eventual price of 300.

STOCK RISE LAGS BEHIND IN CANADA

Upward Movement Is Regarded as Dem Toronto, According to All Precedents of Canadian Markets

SHARP ADVANCE IN NEW YORK MARKET

(Brannon, Brown & Co. Ltd.)

TORONTO, July 6.—Advance in Canadian stock markets has lagged behind that in New York. An upward movement here is regarded as the. If precedent means anything a sharp forward movement in the Canadian stock markets is due. Movements in the Canadian market usually synchronize fairly closely with movement on the New York board. The upward movement in prices in New York has been considerable for some time past, but because it has been orderly, the fact that it has far outstripped movements in the Canadian markets may not have been fully appreciated.

On the Canadian markets there has been an appreciable advance, but however, almost entirely to marked appearance in three or four speculative favorites, such as Brazilian, International Nickel and Noranda, and two or three specialties. Outside of these the market has done little.

With respect to the volume of trading also a striking contrast is presented. On June 3 sales on the New York Exchange were 3,018,200 and on June 10, 2,301,200, whereas sales on July 1 totaled 2,945,000 shares and on July 2, 4,541,700. On the Toronto Stock Exchange on June 4 sales were 68,238 shares as against 19,775 on June 20, and around 50,000 in the closing sessions of June.

Stocks advanced sharply in New York in a market of increasing activity, while Canadian stocks moved little in a dwindling market. The failure of Canadian markets to respond to the more aggressive movements in New York is attributed to several influences. One reason given is that a very marked decline occurred in the prices of several widely distributed market favorites. This has served to contract the buying power of the public. In New York relatively smaller amounts of stock are held by many more investors and thus buying power is not crippled as is the case in Canadian markets, following the severe breaks earlier this year.

As these favorites work up to their previous high levels, under more general buying a broader buying market should develop.

PRICES SHADE LOWER AT START OF NEW YORK TRADING

Food Stocks Show Great Activity, Having in Opposition to General Direction of Market

NEW YORK, July 6.—Transactions in today's short session were on a rather limited scale. Prices were a shade lower at the start of trading on selling which was probably induced in large measure by the sizeable increase in brokers' loan statement released yesterday afternoon.

Most of the steel issues were in good supply in the forepart of the session, and nearly all stocks in this group showed fair price declines. General Electric was subject to heavy pressure and reached sharply while numerous other industrials were lower. Food stocks, led by Postum and Fleischmann, were extremely active and moved in opposite direction of the market. Merger rumors concerning a number of issues in the food division continue in circulation and this accounts for some of the interest manifested in those stocks recently. Liquid Carbonic in the specialty group continued to exhibit advancing tendencies on buying stimulated by reports of increased earnings and better outlook this year. Motor shares were steady while oils were inclined to sag.

Utilities were forced to withstand further realizing and many of the issues in this group were a little lower. Work-end trade reviews stated that seasonal recession in business activities continued throughout the week, although production and distribution are being carried on at a rate well ahead of last year. Present activity which is being maintained by the iron and steel industry came in for considerable favorable comment and proved the feature of the week under review.

In the final hour of the session a number of rubber issues moved upward. Accumulation of the rubber stocks is probably a reflection of the recent favorable commodities figures and the steady increase shown in export figures of the commodity. The declining tendency exhibited by many issues in today's session, we feel, was but a natural occurrence in view of the steady advance within the market, as a whole enjoyed during the past few weeks. However, we continue of the opinion that the buying side on all minor declines is the logical course to follow.

OILS OFFERED IN VOLUME ARE WELL ABSORBED

Demand Proves About Just Equal to Supply—Prices for Active Issues Are Well Maintained

MINING STOCKS LITTLE CHANGED

VANCOUVER, July 6.—Oils were offered in heavy volume on the Vancouver market Saturday, but the demand was just about equal and the prices of the active issues maintained. The mines were again neglected with little change.

Home Oil and Royalite were the strong features, the former, opening at 32c, touched at $32.50, sold up to $34.25 and closed at $34.10 for a gain of 70 cents. Royalite moved up $10 to close at $140.

A.P. Consolidated, Calmont and United Oil, new, were the heaviest sellers. A.P.C. ranged between $4.19 and $4.29, closing 1 point former at $4.26. Calmont lost 6 cents to $4.18, and United closed at $1.06, the peak. Demand was under pressure and eased off 7 cents to $1.30 while Sell City dropped back 75 cents at $22. Dalhousie held firm around $4.40. The balance of the oil was generally neglected.

Pend Oreille was 45 cents stronger at $1.55; Riverside hardened ¼ cents to 43; while Grandview and Kootenay Belle were up 1 and 2 points respectively. George Copper lost 10 cents to $12.35.

Associated Gas & Electric agrees into long term contract with Delaware and Lackawanna to supply power for newly electrified lines.

The national gas consolidation forused in the Texas panhandle under the leadership of Texas Co. will be even larger and more far-reaching than was first indicated, it was learned officially yesterday. L. E. Phillips, president of the Phillips Petroleum Co. one of the concerns involved in the national gas group, was quoted in dispatches from Tulsa, Okla., as saying that the new combine would construct a pipe line and distribute natural gas from the Texas panhandle fields to Chicago, as well as to other cities and communities en route.

Railroad consolidation will be one of the great subjects which will be taken up by the Senate committee on Interstate Commerce at the regular session next Winter. Senators on the committee say they expect the railroad consolidation problem to be one of the major tasks before the next session of Congress and a difficult proposition for the committee to work out.

Negotiations are being conducted in a quiet way for the consolidation of Inland Steel Co. of Chicago, with the Republic Iron and Steel Co. of Youngstown, it is reported. This action follows the expressed intention of the Republic Co. to gain a manufacturing foothold in the important Chicago district.

New life insurance written by forty-four leading companies, which do eighty-two per cent of the life insurance business in the United States, totalled $3,441,816,000 in the first five months of 1929. This is a gain of 5.3 per cent over the similar period a year ago.

Merger of the steel car mills of the East is under way. It was learned here today. Details of the merger were held over the holiday by bankers and officials of several of the interested concerns. A definite announcement, it was indicated, will not be forthcoming for some time but officials hope to have the consolidation completed by September 1.

MAY BE GREATEST WORLD OIL FIELD

Mr. H. E. Hunnings, vice-president of the Victoria Stock Exchange and head of the firm bearing his name, who returned to Victoria yesterday after ten days in Alberta, predicted that the big move in Calgary oils will come early in the Fall when a large number of wells are expected to come in about the same time.

Mr. Hunnings spent most of the time he was in Alberta investigating conditions first hand in the Turner Valley. "Turner Valley" he said "is made now, and it is developing into what was predicted for it early in the year by geologists—possibly the greatest oil field in the world."

The Company's holdings consist of 760 acres subject only to taxes and a half percent royalty, situated in Waite Valley, which parallel Turner Valley at a distance of from three to five miles to the West. The drilling site is in the heart of Waite Valley structure. The drilling of at least ten wells on this structure is announced for this summer.

The Company is drilling the first well on L.S.D. 4 of Section 16, Township 20, Range 3, West of the 5th Meridian. The Directors of the Company are assured that the gas sand we have should be sufficient to pay for the drilling of this well. It is anticipated that actual drilling operations will be commenced not later than the first day of August next.

CONCLUSION OF GEOLOGICAL REPORTS

"With all factors considered I recommend the acreage of Gibraltar Oils Ltd. and in my judgment believe that all and entirely gas should be obtained in wells drilling on this property."

(Signed) STANLEY J. DAVIES,
Registered Professional Engineer.

"Structural conditions in Waite Valley appear to be favorable for accumulation of petroleum and natural gas and it is recommended that a well be sunk to test the producing horizons as made in Section 18, with equipment suitable to drill at least 4,000 feet."

(Signed) RUSSELL V. JOHNSON, Geologist.

The complete geological reports of Stanley J. Davies and Russell V. Johnson will be forwarded on request from the office of the Company at Edmonton.

LOUGHEED & TAYLOR'S COMMENT: "The strength of the financial set-up, the worth of the acreage, the competence and integrity of the management have satisfied us under the most rigorous examination. (Consequently we confidently recommend Gibraltar Oils Limited as a speculation of exceptional merit."

MARINE and TRANSPORTATION

Four New O.S.K. Liners Will Probably Be Built For Transpacific Route

That the Osaka Shosen Kaisha plans to commission four new motor liners to the transpacific service is borne out by the fact that the company has just placed the contract for four new liners, all of which will have accommodation for 750 measurement tons of raw silk in specially constructed silk rooms.

It was learned here yesterday on the receipt of advices from Tokio that the Mitsubishi Dockyard at Nagasaki had been awarded the contract for four high-speed cargo motorships of 2,200 tons each.

The vessels will have a deadweight capacity of 3,700 tons and cargo capacity of 14,000 tons, including 750 tons in the silk room, 1,000 tons in oil tanks and 330 tons in the refrigerator chambers.

Equipped with Mitsubishi-Sulzer engines the vessels will have a speed of seventeen knots. All winches and other machinery will be operated electrically.

For which run the vessels are being built is not known. The Osaka Shosen Kaisha operates its most frequent sailings on the transpacific run between Yokohama, Victoria and Seattle; so that it is probable that the vessels will be commissioned to the northern route rather than to run into San Francisco, particularly as quicker delivery of silk is possible through the ports of Seattle and Vancouver than through San Francisco.

Advices received here yesterday also stated that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha would have the keel for the first motorship to be constructed for the Yokohama-Victoria and Seattle service laid in December.

The second of the three new liners for this route will be started next May and the keel for the third liner next May.

Each of the three new liners being built by the N.Y.K. for the transpacific run will be of 11,000 tons. They will each have a speed of eighteen knots. They are being constructed at a cost of $2,375,000 each, or a total cost of $6,625,000.

BOY SCOUTS WILL SAIL ON ANTONIA

Three Hundred Canadian and American Boy Scouts Will Leave for Birkenhead Jamboree

WINNIPEG, Man., July 6.—When the representatives of the Canadian Boy Scouts sail from Montreal to take part in the great jamboree at Birkenhead, England, they will be joined by a large number of representatives of the Boy Scouts of America, so that there will be quite an international flavor in the trip down the St. Lawrence and across the Atlantic to the port of disembarkation, Liverpool.

The Canadian Scouts will first assemble at Ottawa, and, assuming there for a week in preparation for their trip overseas. The selected Scouts from Ontario, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Manitoba and British Columbia will travel from their homes to the point of assembly over the Canadian National Railways. From Montreal they will sail on the Antonia, one of the Cunard Line, due to sail from this port on July 19.

Arrangements have been made to hold over the liner at Quebec on Saturday, July 20, in order to allow His Excellency the Governor General an opportunity to inspect Canada's representatives as they set out on their great adventure.

The Canadian party will number 175 individuals and will be in command of John A. Sides, assistant chief commissioner for Canada. The other party to sail on the Antonia will consist of 125 Boy Scouts of America, organized in Chicago. They will travel from their place of assembly by Canadian National Railways to Montreal, arriving there early on the morning of July 19. Previously a party of thirty-five Boy Scouts from St. Louis passed through Montreal on their way overseas.

FIRE BURNS HALF LADNER CHINATOWN

LADNER, July 6.—Half of Ladner's Chinatown was destroyed by fire at nine o'clock. The south half of a row of old houses and stores along the Fraser River front was swept out as the flames, fanned by a west wind swept through the section. The blaze started within a few feet of the Imperial Oil and Shell Oil gasoline tanks, but the wind kept the sparks blowing in the opposite direction and so probably saved the town itself. Between a dozen and fifteen buildings were burned and the loss is placed at about $10,000.

TIDES AT VICTORIA

(Time Is Pacific Standard for the 120th Meridian West. It is omitted from the tides, which are based on Greenwich Time. The figures for heights among the subsidiary tides differ from low water. CHILDREN MAY BE MADE IMMUNE FROM DIPHTHERIA GERM

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., July 4.—Dozens of little children in this province are playing about today, totally unaware that their lives are being saved by the latest activity of the Red Cross Society here.

For all over this smallest Canadian province, in the schools, medical science's most recent discovery to combat the childhood scourge of diphtheria, is to be made available free.

Toxoid serum for diphtheria immunization is to be administered to each child whose parents make written application for it, and a single course of three treatments of toxoid will render a child completely immune to diphtheria. Nor is the society content to merely announce this offer. A committee has been appointed to interview all health and school authorities and to give full publicity to the work.

It is interesting to note that, all over Canada, about 1,200 people a year die of diphtheria. Since toxoid serum completely immunizes against the disease, it is obvious that if the same zeal were shown in administering toxoid as is manifest in getting people vaccinated against smallpox, most of these diphtheria deaths would be prevented and about 13,000 cases of serious illness would be prevented every year.

It is only when one considers the matter in the light of these alarming facts, that the true value of the Red Cross' most recent maritime activity is appreciated and one realizes that if such a campaign could be efficiently carried out all over the Dominion diphtheria would be stamped out of Canada in two years.

PECULIAR CANINES FACE COMPETITION

LONDON, July 4.—Describing as "beauty contest" for mongrels at the annual horse parade and pet show held recently at Hampton Court by the Battersea Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the London edition of the Manchester Guardian says:

"The competitors for peculiar dogs was divided into the following classes: 1. The dog with the longest tail; 2. the tail with longest dog; 3. the happiest dog; 4. the dog with the best curly tail; 5. the dog with the least resemblance to any known breed; 6. the best spotted dog; 7. the fattest and the slimmest dog; 8. the dog with the most beautiful eyes; 9. the best hand-shaking dog; and 10. the best begging dog.

"The harmless fetish was for the dog with the most beautiful eyes. The dogs stood in a row and registering emotion, and it soon became obvious that the real contest was between an animal with soft, smiling, 'Pola Negri' eyes and one with eyes that sparkled. The 'Pola Negri' type won.

"Twenty dogs competed for the distinction of being as unlike any breed as possible—twenty dogs which might have been terriers, but for the fact that they looked rather like collies, although their ears had a bulldog touch and their tails bore a resemblance to those of a spaniel.

"Eight hundred entries were received for the whole show and the exhibits included horses, pigeons, donkeys, cats, rabbits, poultry, pigeons, goats, lambs, mice, and even tortoises."

A Letter From London

Many Good New Plays at Theatres—Musical Events Include Canadian Folk Songs Concert—Waltz Poem by Codowsky—Magazine for Women at Work—Empire Service in St. Paul's Is Impressive Ceremony—Canadian Provinces Have Fine London Offices.

The offices of the agents-general for the provinces, as if inspired by the magnificence of Canada House, are gradually settling themselves in premises in keeping with the importance of the work they do. The Quebec office, instead of being tucked away in Kingsway is now housed in the splendid new building of the Sun Life Assurance Co., next door to Canada House, in the very heart of London.

The Nova Scotian offices that have led a rather roaming existence of late years, are now lodged in the same building.

The future address of the Alberian offices is not yet settled, the present premises at No. 1 Charing Cross will have to be given up next December.

The British Columbian offices are in their own stately home, whose ground floor is now occupied by various firms.

The Ontario offices, from which many a grateful Canadian visitor has had a splendid view of the Lord Mayor's show, will soon be twice as big as they are now. The next door house site has been bought and plans made that will be carried out as soon as possible

THE LEAGUE OF EMPIRE

The Empire service at St. Paul's Cathedral was one of the most impressive celebrations of Empire Day that the indomitable honorary secretary of the League of Empire has ever organized. The Duke of Connaught took the salute as the sixty-four flags were carried past him in front of the cathedral steps and then went into the packed cathedral, where there was not an empty seat.

Everyone regretted the absence, through illness, of the veteran honorary secretary, Mrs Orde Marshall. She has identified herself with the youth of the Empire for so many years and so many overseas strangers have had cause to be grateful for her friendly help and counsel that an Empire Day service without her presence seemed almost incredible. Bishop Bidwell, of Ontario, preached the sermon, and among the organizations represented were Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, Hospital Ships, Naval Cadets, Boys' Brigades, Girls' Brigades the Junior British Red Cross Society, children's faces everywhere lit up by the afternoon sun streamed through the stained glass windows. It was a memorable service.

TROOPING BY THE COLORS

Trooping of the colors on the King's Birthday is one of the most gorgeous and moving ceremonies that take place in London. There is something almost uncanny in the incredible precision of the marching and in the wave of emotion evoked by the music of the massed bands and the stately carrying of the colors when the ceremonies rise as they are carried past.

The drum-majors in their gold lace coats and black velvet caps are worth standing for a whole morning to see. This year there was only one thing missing—the central figure in whose honor the great parade is organized, and many heartfelt hopes sped towards Windsor where the King was again ill.

CANADIAN FOLK SONGS

Miss Juliette Gwillim gave a very successful concert at the Central Hall, Westminster, under the patronage of the Hon. Peter Larkin, on Tuesday, June 4, when she sang her repertoire of Eskimo and Indian songs, ending with a group of French-Canadian folk songs. Her research in primitive music has a distinct value which is recognized by everyone who hears her admirable rendering of Eskimo folk songs and the Red Indian songs. One felt in listening to her that Miss Gwillim had really lived with these people and absorbed their atmosphere and point of view till she was able to interpret their music with marvelous acumen. Hampered by an ugly hall and the absence of an intimate atmosphere, she laboured under the burden of explanations. Miss Gwillim had managed to interest her audience by a performance of great charm and high literary worth.

Another concert that took place next night was that of Mr. John Brownlee, the baritone of the Grand Opera, Paris, who sang an extraordinarily beautiful programme of German, Italian, French and English songs. Mr. Brownlee has an excellent voice of large range and quality and great fascination. He is a perfect artiste with absolutely no mannerisms. Yielding to a crowded audience, he gave for his three encores, "Danny Deever," "If I Were King" and "Passing By." He added to the pleasure given by his concert, by not beginning it till ten hours sped towards Windsor.

I went to the Queen's Hall last week to hear that incomparable technical artist, Heifetz. "The perfection of his technique takes one's breath away but leaves one completely cold." He played, amongst other things, a beautiful waltz poem, that Codowsky had composed especially for him. The composer, who is, perhaps, the most brilliant living pianist, was among the audience and told me he had just returned from Budapest and might possibly play next year in London. Mr and Mrs Leo Chernavsky and Mr. and Mrs Mischa Chernavsky were also present. The Chernavskys too are leaving London in a few days for a protracted tour in South Africa and Java. They will come back to England via Vancouver and hope to return in time to spend Christmas at home. In their party was that clever actress, Miss Jeanne de Casalis, whose play, lately produced by the Sunday Play Society, "Let's Leave it at That," will be staged next week at the Queen's Theatre. Mr. Colin Clive, who is part author of the play, is, of course, the hero of "Journey's End."

Writing the latter name reminds me of the amusing party Mr. Maurice Browne gave last Monday at a house warming celebration of his new tenancy of the Prince of Wales' Theatre, whither "Journey's End" has migrated from its first home at the Savoy. Nearly all theatredom, playwrights, managers, actors, actresses and press agents were congratulating Mr Browne on his courageous production of a play which had been refused by almost every manager in London. Mr. Browne is now in negotiation for a theatre of his very own and if he is lucky enough to continue his unprecedented success with "Journey's End," he may end by revolutionizing the English theatre. Among his guests were Miss Lena Ashwell and St. John Ervine who still talks of his Canadian experiences.

OVERSEAS ENTERTAINERS

Overseas people will run the risk of being killed by kindness this month. Lady Forster, the president, and the central executive of the Victoria League, are giving an "at home" at Bedford College, Regent's Park, when H.R.H. the Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, has promised to be present. Lord and Lady Clarendon are throwing open the beautiful house and grounds of Pitt House, Upper Hampstead home, for two garden parties during the season, the Roehampton Club are organizing a party at which polo will be played, and all Overseas visitors may stand on pavement of be. The Dowager Lady Jersey, ex-president of the Victoria League, gave a very enjoyable reception last week when Lady Ryre, the wife of the High Commissioner for Australia, and many Australians, South Africans and New Zealanders were present.

ART SALES

Collectors and connoisseurs will have their work cut out for them this month, for magnificent collections of every form of art are to be sold at Messrs. Christies and Sotheby's and various other less famous auction rooms. Furniture, silver, family portraits, statuary, exquisite jewels and rare books will be put up for sale. Among the treasures are two splendid portraits by Sir Anthony Van Dyck, belonging to Mrs. Murray Stuart, of Lessendrum. There will also be Rembrandts, Gainsboroughs, Hoppners and Reynolds. Among the other treasures will be a marvelous chase or skirting with twelve panels of Limoges enamel that has had a romantic history. It was given by Francis I to Cardinal Wolsey and by Wolsey to Henry VIII. He gave it to Anne Boleyn, and Anne gave it to Lady Worcester. Since then it has belonged to the Cavendishes and to Alfred de Rothschild. The present owner, Mr Victor Sassoon (Hamburg), is giving the sum it is sold for as a thanksgiving fund for the King's recovery.

THE GATEWAY

A new magazine dedicated to women at work, has lately made its appearance and, leaving through its pages, one is struck by the very high level of both articles and illustrations. The aim of the promoters of "The Gateway" is to foster the natural desire of woman to take a more important part in the work of the world as co-operators with men. I am glad to see the part that Canadian women are taking in this progress. In the first number there is a short article on "A School-girl's Impression of Canada," and a series of paragraphs on vacant posts in Canada and some charming illustrations of Canadian homes, together with an article on "Canada for Household Workers," and an interesting article on the show industry of Miss Mary Benedict. The June number has a new feature in "travel service" organized by Mrs. Kathleen K. Bowker, who undertakes to do every imaginable service to give her clientela travelers' joy as well as travelers. Mrs. Bowker, who is one of the cleverest Canadian women in London, will certainly make a success of this new enterprise. The Gateway is one of the best magazines I have seen for some time. It is published by the Ivor Press, Ltd., 6 Hanover Square, and costs the modest sum of 1s.pence.

THE LONDON THEATRE

There have been a good many new plays this week. George Groves-Smith presents "Why Drag in Marriage?" a comedy of good manners. Mr Audrey Scott, a daughter of Mr E. V. Lucas, and wife of Mr. Harold Scott, is a brilliant piece of propaganda written by a modern, presumably to show there is nothing much in modernity but that, as she makes one of her characters say, "It is the people who get married who show the real courage without making any fuss." The plot, such as it is, is very slight. Pretty, unsophisticated Rose Hawkin, deliciously played by Gillian Lind, entertains a fellow talk a great deal about free love, though most of them have never tried it, and drink more cocktails than are good for them. When the man she falls in love with gives at marriage, she proceeds to try and outdo the rest, without much success, and the play ends with Rose reunited to her Gerald. Margo Sieveking, Joyce Kennedy, Adrianne Allen and Alfred Lloyd played their parts extremely well. Mr Kenneth Kent, as a suprfitteer lounge-lizard, acted a difficult part with much skill. The dialogue was often amusing but, to put it vulgarly, the play had no guts in it.

"Coquette," at the Apollo Theatre, is another example of what America sends us. As one of the audience told me, it is no wonder they come over to see the English theatre.

At Wyndham's, the entire Cassor family are acting in a series of performances of "Jane Clegg," by St. John Ervine and Professor Gilbert Murray's translation of "The Medea," of Euripides. A double bill is always trying, but Miss Sybil Thorndike came through it triumphantly. St. John Ervine's play bids fair to become a classic. It moves towards its end with all the inevitability of the Greek tragedy, and the weak husband of Mr. Cassor, the wastrel mother of Clare Orrell, and the children of Anne and Mary Cassor, were all admirable. I left the theatre plunged in gloom, tempered by admiration.

"Marigold" has been revived at the Kingsway Theatre, with Sophia Stewart taking the name part created by Angela Baddeley, and Jean Clyde playing the minister's wife, created by Jean Cadell. The charm of this scandalous comedy has evidently not waned, judging from the reception given by an enthusiastic audience.

Fifth Brigade Camp Has Given Valuable Training

Competitive Series Has Extended Over Three Weeks: Unit Has Remarkable Record to Sustain With Eastern Artillerymen

The annual camp at Macaulay Plains of the 5th, 14th and 24th Anti-Aircraft Section of the 5th B.C. Coast Brigade, C.A., under the command of Colonel J. C. Harris, V.D., has just come to a successful close and brought out more strongly than ever the changes that have taken place in the training that is now necessary for the firing of coast defence artillery.

Today a great deal of technical knowledge is employed in mastering the exact and scientific firing of modern artillery.

For the first time this year the new three-pounder anti-aircraft guns were used and proved to be a great improvement over the one-inch, also wireless communication with the target vessel.

The competitive series were held on June 27 and 28 and July 6, and it will be some time before the results are known. The competition with the Eastern units has always been very keen and the Victoria unit has taken first place in the past four years, winning four Governor-General cups in succession, and many other notable trophies to add to those gained in prewar days, including the Canadian Artillery Association prizes, which are awarded annually in competition with the units from Quebec and Halifax.

In pre-war days the batteries were trained only on one class of gun, but now the training must cover all types of equipment. The batteries work with reduced numbers, and these are trained as specialists. The gunnery school is now conducted at Macaulay under the command of a very able staff.

In the year 1922 the identity of the old 5th Regiment, C.O.A., became merged into the 5th B.C. Coast Brigade, C.A., which comprises the 5th and 34th Coast Defence Batteries and 5th Field Artillery, 13th Siege and 2nd Anti-Aircraft Sections. The old 5th Regiment, C.O.A., has been so long a part of the history of the City of Victoria, and so many Victorians who once belonged to the regiment must remember the camps of other years, it may be of interest to recall an incident of twenty years ago when Major J. Parker Hibben used a new system of ranging which he had worked out himself. It was three rounds, one plus fifty yards, one minus fifty yards, and one range as given by the depression range finder. After firing the three rounds at one second intervals, all corrections were taken off and the battery fired thirteen rounds of gunfire and scored all hits. Major Hibben was much commended by the chief umpire (Colonel English), who said "The results are excellent, but were obtained more by good luck than good management, and as they were not made according to the rules of 'Practice Seaward,' as laid down by the Book of Rules,' no marks were awarded, much to the annoyance of old No. 3 Company. This year, for the first time, a similar method of ranging is now incorporated in the Rule Book of 'Practice Seaward,' and found to be superior to the old method of ranging

TO ENCOURAGE EFFICIENCY

The brigade has been affiliated for years with the Canadian Artillery Association, to which all batteries must belong. This association is composed of many prominent citizens throughout Canada and every year trophies are competed for by all batteries. In order to keep up the high standard of efficiency in the Artillery competitions are arranged between the National Artillery of Great Britain and Canada. In 1908 the National Artillery Association of Great Britain and Canada, sent a team of Regulars to Canada. Competitions were held at Halifax for the Cup presented by the Prince of Wales, and at Petawawa for the Field and Heavy Artillery. These competitions were to have taken place every four years, but the war intervened, and since 1911, when a composite detachment from Canada was sent to England, there have been no exchanges. Last year General Macdonald, D.S.O., of Military District No. 11, who had just returned from England, stated that the record made by the Coast Defence Section of the Canadian Detachment in competition at Cliff End, Isle of Wight, in the year 1911, had never yet been equalled. This was the detachment which included members of the old 5th Regiment, C.O.A., under the command of the then Captain J. C. Harris, now O.C. of the 5th B.C. Coast Brigade. The prize competed for was the Prince of Wales' Cup, a magnificent trophy, now in the care of the Canadian Artillery Association at Ottawa.

The young gunners on the strength of the brigade today are very keen and give every promise of holding the traditions of the "Old Fifth Regiment."

At a concert an old man was given the job of collecting tickets at the door. After a time he sought out the secretary.

"I think there's going to be trouble for you," he whispered mysteriously.

"Why, what's the matter?"

"Bigamy—no less," was the ticket collector's sad reply. "I've let in two women who said they were the secretary's wife, and now there's a third wanting to come in."

The old lady was a regular church member. Whenever Satan's name was mentioned the minister noticed she bowed her head. Finally he asked her the reason for this and she replied: "Politeness costs you nothing.

AUSTRALIA IS BLAMELESS IN NATIVE RIOTS

Official Inquiry Into New Guinea Uprising Discloses No Fault on Part of Authorities of Islands

COLORED SEAMEN'S TALK RESPONSIBLE

Wonderful Increase in Favorable Trade Balance During Eight Years Answers Charge of Neglect of Duty

EIGHT years ago Australia took over the care and protection of what has been the German portion of New Guinea, under the mandate of the Allied Powers. Shamefacedly complaints from Geneva have probably been responsible for some betterment, though the execution of any mandate over primitive and illogical peoples is always liable to criticism, says The Times, London. Publication of the result of the official inquiry into circumstances leading up to the revolt of native police and native labor in February of this year was opportune, because it was made amply clear that the authorities at Rabaul themselves were free of all blame. The disturbances were attributed to the thoughtless rhetoric of colored seamen from foreign ships, who believed that they were helping the natives by making them dissatisfied with their lot.

The outside world should now be willing to believe that, whatever mistakes Australia may have made in her execution of the mandate, none of them were due to wilful disregard to the terms of her charge. The terms of the mandate were that there should be no slave labor (forced labor, except for official purposes, no traffic in arms or in ammunition, liquor, no military or naval fortifications, and no military training of the inhabitants. It was a bold essay of a little over 600 the half million natives, 600 islands and 1,000,000 square miles of land were more or less savage by nature, and had been taught the rudiments of civilization only by forced labor and the lash.

Trade figures alone are an answer to those who say that Australia has not fulfilled her charge. In 1921 the favorable balance on the value of goods exported over goods imported was £10,000. Last year it was £860,000. Copra is the principal product of the territory and 20 per cent of the output is now directly produced by natives.

STRATFORD THEATRE

Foundation Stone of £750,000 Structure Laid—Will Hold About 1,000 People

Details of the new Shakespeare Memorial Theatre the foundation stone of which was laid on July 3 at Stratford-on-Avon, and which will cost £150,000, are contained in the latest report of the governors. The theatre will hold 1,000 people and will have ample foyers and a refreshment room leading on to the terrace. Mr Bernard Shaw and Sir Hedley Jackson are on the theatre council, and Mr Bridges Adams is director. The total British fund now stands at over £155,000, and £10,000 was in March standing in New York to the credit of the building and endowment fund.

WINDJAMMERS' RACE

Finnish Barque Makes Cork From Melbourne in 84 Days and Wins Contest

The four-masted Finnish barque Archibald Russell arrived in Cork on June 5, having completed the voyage from Australia in ninety-four days. She has thus easily beaten the performance of the other windjammers. Beatrice, Herzogin Cecilie, and Lawhill which had already arrived at Falmouth. The Archibald Russell sailed from Melbourne on March 4 bound for the United Kingdom with a cargo of 4,500 tons of wheat. She experienced fine weather and good winds throughout the voyage and passed the Finnish barquentine Moskar on June 2 and the Finnish ship Herzogin Cecilie weeks earlier. Both these vessels sailed from Melbourne one month before the Archibald Russell.

PRAISES INDIAN WOMEN

Lady Simon Tells British Commonwealth League Work Performed Promises of Eastern Empire

Lady Simon recently addressed the delegates to the annual conference of the British Commonwealth League at a luncheon at the Criterion Restaurant, London. She said that until the women of India took their responsibilities towards their own people as a serious matter, the true greatness of India would not appear before the world. The heart of India was beginning to beat in its womanhood, and she thought the women of India deserved the highest praise. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu (India) said that she thought the crown and climax of the feminist movement should be the absence of any further sex consciousness.

EARLIEST ENGLISHMEN

Sir Arthur Keith Speaks of "Beaker" Inhabitants of Britain About 1,800 B.C.

Sir Arthur Keith, in his presidential address at the annual congress of the Royal Anthropological Institute, at Brighton, took as his subject "The Pre-Roman Inhabitants of Southern England."

He began by describing skeletons which had been discovered in shallow graves on the South Downs. Common cranial characteristics, he said, showed that they had some affinity to the "beaker" people who began to swarm into England from Central and Northwestern Europe some 2,000 years before the Christian era. There was much yet to be found out about the "beaker" invasion of England. We were on fairly firm ground when we dated its beginning about 2000 B.C., or soon after. He did not believe that "not a Briton was left when the Saxons had done with them." As we went westward in England skeletons of pre-Roman Britain became more numerous in the excavations of the marsh village at Glastonbury, skulls of the inhabitants were found. Although their mode of life differed, yet these marsh-dwellers were of the pit-digger racial type. No doubt both spoke a Celtic tongue.

ROYAL ASCOT DOES ANOTHER

Annual Parade for Outre Fashions Features Return to Female Street-Sweeper Dress

THE PRINCE WAS COMME IL FAUT

The Prince of Wales, who failed in an attempt a year ago to set the fashion of turned-up trousers with a morning coat and who in some other less remarkable ways since has retaliated new ideas with no greater success, appears to have received the conclusion that even his example is not strong enough to undermine Englishmen's respect for traditional observances, and there was no shade of difference between His Royal Highness's top hat, tail coat, and grey-and-black striped trousers and those of thousands of other young men of fashion at Ascot.

Every London season since the war Royal Ascot has shown some increase in brilliancy and this year, although the royal course has been shorn of one of its accustomed glories, the absence of the King and the consequent abandonment of the ceremonial procession which for years has been a feature of the Gold Cup race, Ascot 1929 has imposed on its recent predecessors. It has provided something of a shock by its apparent tendency of a good many women to adhere to the old-style fashions of long skirts and untidy-looking coats and dresses. It is asked whether the fair sex, having conquered in the battle for freedom in their raiment, is about to renew allegiance to the hobble skirts and trailing draperies which hampered earlier generations. The answer is probably to be found in the fact that Ascot has always been a parade ground for the display of novel fashions and even eccentricities of mode, and that in their recent revolt against tilting skirts some few women, not daring to take anything more, had decided to attract attention by putting on a dress.

In regard to men's wear Ascot has afforded no indication of a tendency to espouse a movement for reform in clothing such as Mr Joseph Ely is troubling railways, harbors, posts, communications and airways to reach and other common economic interests, which is that men would achieve both health and comfort by abandoning braces.

Mr. Jowett's Conversion

Mr Jowett's rapid conversion to the Labor Party has led to a crop of epigrams and parodies. Here is example is an epigram based on the Prime Minister's pious hope, in a published correspondence between them, that Mr. Jowett would find comfort both of mind and soul as our colleague:

Though the dove never spied mark a Liberal title;
Any place which his sole he could rest on,
A happier bird (if he'll pardon the word)
Is the junior member for Preston.

From an interview curt in the gar-
Where he's welcomed with pipe and with
To the comfort he'll find, both of soul and of mind
In the liberal bosom of Labor.

And here is an imaginary rendering of Mr Jowett's reply to the original invitation:

Air "O Mistress Mine"

Soul mate of mine, what are you seeking?
O hark and hear! your true friend's speaking
Who can sing both red and pink?
Simple membership for Preston
Is not a thing a man can rest on.
Willing horses need no wink!

What is Law? 'tis not emotion!
Labor sale for High Devotion
And rewards it well be sure!
Make the brief cross-country journey
Be my General Attorney!
Samuel's stock will not endure.

HIDDEN PIPES MIGHT CAUSE SHIP TO SINK

Admiralty Constructor Tells Vestris Court of Inquiry That Inaccessible Openings May Prove Fatal

FOUNDERING LIKELY LAID TO DEFEAT

Authorities Recommend Reduction of Water Inlets and Introduction of Control Valve

SIR John Biles, former naval constructor, British Admiralty, made an important revelation of a defect in the construction of the Ss. Vestris, which sank in a gale off the coast, in ships built in the future. He was testifying at the London Board of Trade inquiry into the sinking of the Vestris, which foundered off the American coast November 12 last with 111 fatalities.

Speaking at the thirty-third session of the court of inquiry, Sir John, who was one of the witnesses in the Titanic investigation in 1912, said that the foundering of the Vestris was due to water getting in below, most probably through a fracture of a five-inch pipe.

He contended that a proper examination by a competent surveyor before the ship sailed would not necessarily reveal a defect in the original pipe casting. The pipe might be sound, he considered, but its position in the ship made it difficult if not impossible to examine it during the voyage.

Sir John said many ships carried in them a potential cause of loss due to the position of similar pipes. He considered it undesirable that any pipe opening through the ship's side should be unobservable. He advised a reduction in the number of openings through a ship's side and would have connection controlled by a valve which could be shut off regardless of the vessel's fate.

ENVISION U.S. OF EASTERN AFRICA

British "Harmonizer" Prepares Way for Union of Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika

A United States of East Africa has been brought a step nearer realization by Sir Samuel Wilson, British "harmonizer" appointed by the late Conservative Government to visit Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika. Sir Samuel is understood to have recommended the creation of a union upon lines recommended by the Ormsby-Gore commission under Sir Edward Hilton Young.

The scheme, as now reported contemplates a new Governor-General, assisted by a new legislative council comprising two official and two non-official members from each dependency concerned.

Native interests will be assuredsided in an advisory capacity the heads of the administrations controlling railways, harbors, posts, communications and airways, research and other common economic interests, which is said to mean a transfer from existing local legislature to the new central government.

"THE MEN WHO MOIL FOR GOLD"

Kalgoorlie's 150 Mile Thirty-Inch Water Pipe and B.C.'s Prospectors' Trails Praised

"There are strange things done 'neath the midnight sun by the men who moil for gold." So said Robert Service, and we had said probably not heard of gold mining conditions in Western Australia, where Kalgoorlie has its water supply pumped 150 miles through a thirty-inch pipe. This would be considered a big job in any civilized country, but to lay this pipe through 350 miles of desert to a mining community required real engineering courage. Such has always been the story of the yellow metal. But life is getting easier for the prospector and minor British Columbia is opening up more of the operating trails for him.

"The value of this work cannot be gauged in terms of the expenditure of money, which is supposed to be about $100,000, but will nevertheless be considerable," says the report of the Canadian Intelligence Department. "The programme the biggest ever undertaken in a single season to expose the mineral wealth of the province to systematic examination, is now being shaped to order the directions of W. A. Mc. Kenzie Provincial Minister of Mines after conference with the district mining engineers from all parts of the province."

TATTOO GIVEN PSYCHIC TURN

Aldershot Pageant Declared to Illustrate Growth of Altruism Old as Christianity as Well as Instinct

FEATURE KING'S NOBLE MESSAGE

Among the multiple attractions the London season held forth, not the least was the Aldershot tattoo, a military pageant which drew between 50,000 and 100,000 spectators nightly from London and even further afield to Rushmoor Camp, some fifty odd miles from town.

As a spectacle it is true that annual show has no parallel in the world, and it is at least symptomatic of the times that what used to be a glorification of British feats of arms has now been given a symbolic character, in which the dominant idea is that recourse to militaristic methods can only be justified by moral and chivalrous motives. This year, for instance, the programme said: "While the spectacle aims to interest, it aims also to instruct and to emphasize the growth of an altruism which begin with the Christian religion, and which in subsequent centuries assumed strange and sometimes irreconcilable aspects.

"In the same order of ideas a feature is made of the display of the thanksgiving message which the King sent from his sick bed to drive of grateful kindness at so early a date of the true nature of man and nations. These words were lifted up in fire across the background of the arena, while the rays of the sunset burst out of peace break over the horizon.

MOTOR COACHES TO REPLACE STEAMERS

Modern Equipment to Be Used on Speedboats on Fjord West Highlands

Following up their proposals for reorganizing steamer and train services to and from the West Highlands David MacBrayne Limited, Glasgow have decided to discontinue their steamer service through the Crinan Canal, and from Crinan to Oban and to substitute for it a fleet of new motor coaches between Ardrishaig and Oban.

The firm will however continue to run steamers on the Caledonian Canal but motor coaches will be run several times daily between Fort William and Inverness and between the Falls of Foyer and Inverness. Steamers will take the place of the mail steamers on Loch Ness.

The arrangements now made also provide for a wholly new one-day excursion from Glasgow to Oban and return—by steamer, motor coach and train.

Tribute to Mr. Baldwin

The Bishop of Winchester, speaking at the conference, referred to Mr. Baldwin's resignation. Politics, he said, was not a thing of mine or of this conference, but speaking as a Bishop I cannot forbear to express the sense of gratitude which must be felt throughout the whole nation to a man who has lately been in office, and who whatever may be thought of his policy, has shown the temperament of those qualities which we most of us most admire. He has been the straight sensible, and cultured English gentleman never remaining more than he felt himself able to perform.

The King's Return

By ALFRED NOYES

Not for a throne restored, or crown;
But for the life that all men share
Whoride across a flower down
And breathe the salt thyme-scented air.

Not for the kingdom and the power;
But for the gladness all men know
In field and forest, sun and shower
And many a joy that kings forego.

Not for the monarch, but the man
Who bears the blackbird's song anew,
And with a brightening eye may scan
The hawthorn sparkling the dew.

Yet, not for king or man, the light
Of quiet thought that shines unseen,
And crowns with happiness bought
One woman's head
England, the Queen!

II

O democratic Shadow of Death,
Against thy will, what has thou done
To stifle Thunders in the heath
Yet lead thy victim to his throne?

Back to the throne of those who serve
Back to the throne of those who reign.
Proud if at last he shall deserve,
In death, the world's "well done" again.

Light in his eyes from sky and sail,
And sea, that ripple like England's rose,
Blood in his veins that shall not fail,
Because through all men born it flows

Touched by the universal dream,
One with the hearts that knew his need,
Back from the galleways of the tomb,
Her king returns, a king indeed.

EMPIRE FARMERS' TOUR

Lord Bledisloe to Lead British and Canadian Agriculturists to New Zealand

At the invitation of the British National Union, which is organizing the Empire Farmers' tour to New Zealand in January next, Lord Bledisloe has accepted the leadership of the party, which will consist of fifty British, fifteen Canadian and fifteen South African farmers. An attractive programme has been prepared by the New Zealand Farmers' Union, which is acting in close co-operation with the organizers. The tour is also receiving the cordial support of the Dominion Government, a representative of which will accompany the party throughout their visit. Numerous applications have been received for inclusion in the party, and there is every prospect of the full complement of members being secured.

GIANT AIR YACHT

Uses Flying Boat for Private Owner Features Deck Provision for Airplane

The first flying yacht to be constructed in Britain for a private owner is being completed at Southampton. It is a development of the giant gigantic Napier Flying boats a fleet of which recently completed a long distance flight from Plymouth to Australia and China. The hull is in three sections. In the nose is the fo'c'sle, or crew's quarters, with seats for the pilot and crew and sleeping bunks for four. The central portion is occupied by the passengers saloon and a specially constructed sleeping cabin. In after portion are the kitchen and luggage hold. When afloat on this water yachting can be secured round the hull and deck chairs and tea tables can be laid. Three engines totalling 1,500 horsepower will drive the new flying yacht at over 100 miles an hour.

SURPLUS GIVES TRUSTEE PAUSE

Administrator Does Billion Dollars Worth of Business with Revenue Profit of $215,000 in Year

The capital value of funds and land now under the administration of the Public Trustee is about $211,000,000. The annual income being $10,500,000. In his annual report the Public Trustee states: "These figures seem to constitute a remarkable instance of purely voluntary recourse to the services of a Government department." Over 2,000 new cases were accepted during the year, and the aggregate value of the new business was $12,744,000.

The expenses for the years work, net were $26,384, and there was a surplus of £42,724. The Public Trustee says that as soon as he is satisfied that such a substantial surplus is likely to become constant he will recommend a further reduction in fees. Since the office was instituted the cases accepted have numbered 36,000. There were 17,228 under administration at the date of the report. Five hundred were incurred by trusts during the year, and 1,000 were made good out of current revenue.

RE-NEACT ZEEBRUGGE

Veterans of Immortal Raid Organize Thrilling Reproduction of Scene on Isle of Man

Veterans of Zeebrugge lived again the stirring of their epic naval feat, when a midnight pageant on the destruction of the block was staged in the Harbour of Douglas, Isle of Man, recently, before thousands who had come for the "T. T." holiday week. Victoria Pier represented the Mole, and when Admiral Sir Roger Keyes famous message "St George for England" was illuminated by giant fireworks at the end of the pier, small speed craft carrying torpedoes darted silently into the harbor. A mine from mock guns rent the night, and as torpedoes were discharged at enemy destroyers, motor craft laid a mile off laid smoke flares. The shows of flame, the rattling of machine-gun fire and the crash of shell after shell lent vivid realism to the spectacle.

Speaking in the Abbey, he said that they were justified in characterizing Bruce as their great national hero. He was the preserver of Scotland. Bruce was buried within the precincts of the Abbey.

The comedy, which is entitled "Defiled," will be produced by Mr. Leon at Wyndham's Theatre.

COOK & SON CARRIED ARMY

Famous Travel Agency's Biggest Job Was Transportation of British Force to Wadi Halfa

OWES ITS START TO TEMPERANCE

"The biggest thing we ever did was the transport of the Egyptian force from railhead to Wadi Halfa for the relief of Khartoum and General Gordon," said a director of the firm of Thomas Cook & Son, and the grandson of the founder to an interview given to The London Observer lately on the occasion of his retiring after fifty years of active direction of the business.

"Few people know that the world famous travel agency owes its beginning to the temperance movement.

The business was established eighty-eight years ago according to Mr. Cook, who says "My grandfather, who was by way of being rather a social reformer, was interested in the teetotal movement in Leicester. In the year 1841 a big temperance fete was being arranged in the park at Loughborough and he was wondering how he could help make it a success.

"It occurred to him to arrange with the Midland Railway for a special train from Leicester to Loughborough. That was the first special train that was run for the use of the public. It led to others of a similar kind, and my grandfather thought there might be business in the idea, and he began to organize it."

Mr Cook considers his most interesting experience to have been his journey with the Prince of Wales through Palestine.

"On that tour," he says, "we had about 120 Germans, including the Crown Prince, and we had 300 mules, about 100 Turkish Pashas and about 100 Arabs. The Arabs had to honor to the Emperor, and about twenty-five camels, about twenty Turkish f rode into Jerusalem in front of the state procession, when the Kaiser entered the city."

CHURCHES FIGHT SLUMS

Combine and Acquire Derelict Properties and Convert Them Into Fit for Modern Habitations

In an effort to eradicate slums, members of the Greater Britain Society have formed an organization for acquiring derelict property, purchasing £100 to £150 in reconditioning each house and providing tenement dwellers with pleasant, habitable homes. This fact was disclosed at the seventh of a series of noonday prayer meetings just held in Bristol by the National Housing and Town Planning Council, which adopted a resolution for coming amendment of the Minister of Health's proposed amendment of the Town Planning Act to all vacant as well as occupied land.

GHOSTS HOLD REUNIONS IN OLD RECTORY

Sussex Village Scene of Weird Visitations by Legendary Victims of Gruesome Tragedy

HEADLESS DRIVERS ON OLD-TIME COACH

Vicar Awaits Nocturnal Intruder in Vacant Room but Hockey Stick Beats Air

GHOSTLY figures of headless coachmen and a nun, an old-time coach drawn by two bay horses, which appears and vanishes mysteriously, and dragging footsteps in empty rooms—all the ingredients of a first-class ghost story are awaiting investigation by psychic experts near Long Melford, Suffolk. The scene of the ghostly visitations is the rectory at Borley, a few miles from Long Melford.

It is a building erected on the part of the site of a great monastery founded in the Middle Ages, and the scene of a gruesome tragedy.

The present rector, Rev. C. E. Smith, and his wife made the rectory their residence in the late of warnings by previous occupants.

The first unusual happening was the sound of slow dragging footsteps across the floor of an unoccupied room. Then one night Mr. Smith, armed with a hockey stick, sat in the room and waited for the noise. Once again it came—the sound of feet in some kind of slippers treading on the bare boards.

Mr Smith lashed out with his stick at the spot where the footsteps seemed to be, but the stick whistled through the empty air and the steps continued across the room.

Then a servant girl brought from London indeed there were two days' work declaring emphatically that she had seen a nun walking in the wood at the back of the house.

This was followed by mysterious lights which appeared in a disused wing of the building and which were visible from the roadway. But when the rector went to make an inspection of the wing

Finally comes the remarkable story of an old-fashioned coach, seen twice on the lawn by a servant, which remained in sight long enough for the girl to distinguish the brown color of the horses. This same servant also declares that she has seen a nun leaning over a gate near the house.

The villagers dread the neighborhood of the rectory after dark and will not pass it alone.

Peculiarly enough all these "visitations" coincide with the death of a terrible tragedy which, according to legend, occurred in the monastery which once stood on this spot.

According to an old legend, a young nun of the monastery fell in love with a nun at a nearby convent and they used to meet secretly at midnight in the wood on to which the rectory now backs. Then one day they arranged to elope, and another nun had a coach waiting for them road outside the wood so that they could escape.

From this point the legend varies. Some say that the nun and her lover quarrelled, and that he strangled her in the wood and was caught and hanged for the crime, or that the nun hurled alive in the walls of the monastery.

The previous rector of Borley, now members of the Greater Britain Society experience he had one night, when walking along the road outside the rectory, he heard the clatter of hoofs. Looking around, he saw to his horror an old-fashioned coach lumbering along the road, driven by two headless men. He says he pressed the fact that even if his horses had been headless his mare could not have been, for the coach driver on one side and the footman along that he could not have been headless.

"They are entirely unfounded and untrue I have never made a practice of serving liquor in my home either in Washington or Illinois and I don't intend to begin it now."

She Knows All About Crops

By WILFRID EGGLESTON

CONVERSATIONAL openings are funny things. Usually it's the weather.

"Lovely day 'isn't it?" or "Wasn't that storm last night a corker?"

In fact, Oliver Herford once said that if it wasn't for the weather 999.999 out of every million conversations would never get started.

But fashions change. The first peak-green blades of wheat have ventured out into the prairie sunshine and now, from the Red River to the Rockies, the popular greeting has become

"How's the crops out your way?"

The bank manager asks it by force of habit, as he scribbles an illegible signature across a note for the farmer in overalls before him; the grocery clerk introduces it as he hands white twine around the bag of coffee; and the depot agent gets it off his chest as he hands over repairs for the seed-drill or the spring-tooth cultivator.

The query echoes back and forth across the wheat-lands until the thing becomes ridiculous. Saskatchewan shouts across the fence to Alberta and Manitoba shouts across the fence to Saskatchewan:

"How's the crops out your way?"

Even Ontario and the Maritimes have been known to take a casual interest in the tender seedlings that are bespangling the million-broad acres of prairie wheat-land. The wholesale merchants are curious, the grain exchange and the elevator companies wonder what volume the golden stream will have in the Fall, operators and loan companies take keen personal interest in the amount of pocket money Farmer John Carnieh will have when the 1929 crop reals in. Manufacturers are all eyes and ears on the quest for new and larger markets. They are all asking the question, "They don't want to wait until the wheat is threshed and in the bin. They want to know now.

Picture these importunate men, before a sort of Delphic oracle, a mute impassive spirit of the prairie, demanding of the sphinx, the inscrutable West, such a prosaic impossible question as this, while the black fields hardly yet ripple with growing grain.

"How many bushels will you grow this year?"

And then give imagination a little more rein, and out of the lips of the oracle, from the jaws of the sphinx, hear a voice, the voice of a woman, replying, in accents of vigor and assurance:

"Three hundred and fifty-five million bushels of wheat!"

This is no fairy story. The question is propounded every Spring. The answer is made promptly, ringing with conviction, in a woman's voice.

The woman's name is E. Cora Hind. She is the commercial and agricultural editor of The Manitoba Free Press. She has been attending the prairie crop since 1904. This will be her twenty-fifth estimate.

Let me back a minute. Lethbridge, Alberta, is a typical wheat-country town. During the growing season the wheat crop monopolizes conversation. Every heat wave that suffuses the plains with the ominous scent of "cooked" wheat starts a panic; every heavy rain sets farmers feet doing a hornpipe.

In such a town a newspaper is inevitably an agricultural paper; a city editor is still more a country editor. Harold Long, editor of The Lethbridge Herald, always had his desk strewn with samples of wheat enthusiastic farmers had brought in, or roots of alfalfa, or sugar beets, or sunflowers. I always thought it lucky that his stock enthusiasts did not make contributions, too.

One sultry afternoon in late July I came in from a long tramp out to one of the mines to get a strike "story" and saw Harold very busily engaged with a visitor, a woman who, tought at first glance have been taken for a tourist from Peoria, Ill., or Kalamazoo, Mich., she wore a broad-brimmed sombrero, riding-breeches, a long brown duck coat and a soft khaki shirt. But no ordinary tourist ever spoke as she was speaking.

For it soon became clear to me that Harold Long, whom I had always regarded as the last word on Southern Alberta problems, had confidently assumed the role of disciple and that the master—a woman—was analyzing with swift clear strokes the crop situation of the West in general and Lethbridge in particular.

I should have known without asking. It was E. Cora Hind, the crop authority of Western Canada, on one of her personal inspections of the great wheat fields.

Miss Hind resents fiercely the attempt to consider her chiefly in the role of a woman doing work extraordinary for a woman. "The usual statement is that I'm a remarkable woman because I can do it; the implication is that the average woman is too dumb to succeed at a man's task—and I resent the implication, for it's false." Miss Hind in her Winnipeg office is not the Miss Hind of the Western inspection tour as to dress, but she speaks with the same authority and vigor.

"To my mind," she said, "far too much has been made of the personal factor in the annual crop estimate of The Free Press. It is true that I first suggested it and that I have been personally associated with it ever since. But hardly ever is it pointed out that this is a splendid example of public service on the part of a paper. These appraisals are voluntary; they are unbiased; they cost a great deal of money. The Free Press serves the community in a variety of ways, but this is a special service we have chosen to make to the West. It illustrates the opportunity available for every paper to make a notable contribution to the life of the country in which it circulates.

"I always say," Miss Hind went on, "that there are three things the public never begins to pay the value of. They are bread, milk and the daily paper."

The idea of making a personal estimate of the crop grew out of the crisis of 1904. That was the first season black rust made its appearance among the wheat fields of the Red River Valley, and experts from the South-West and from Washington came up and pulled a long face over Manitoba's prospects.

"Thirty-five million bushels for the whole of the West, they prognosticated. Panic spread among the business men. Credit tightened up. The West lost caste in financial quarters.

The Manitoba Free Press and Miss Cora Hind were satisfied that the rust was not so black as had been painted. They were sure that thirty-five million bushels was an unfair estimate. They decided on making a personal survey of the West's crop.

"When we came back," Miss Hind related, with a twinkle in her eye, "I made a public estimate that the crop would yield between fifty and fifty-five million bushels. And what were the final figures? Fifty-four and a half millions! Engineer's luck," she concluded with a shrug of her shoulders.

Several experiments were made in method. For a while a corps of picked men were sent out under Miss Hind's direction, but the cost grew prohibitive. Then the present scheme, embracing this year a total of 365 correspondents, supplemented by personal inspections in July and August, were perfected.

"At first we used to take trains to central points and drive out in a buggy or a democrat," Miss Hind explained. "Those were great days. Commercial travellers had to get about the same way those days, and when I saw any of them getting off at a station I didn't wait to reserve a room at the hotel—I made straight for the livery stable and made sure of my team. I used to get the best teams, too. A lot of the livery stables in those days were run by ex-mounties. They knew horses and they knew the country and were generally very successful."

Miss Hind's Forecasts

THEN came the day of the motor car, hired at the livery stable as teams were hired, and then the day when a driver started out from Winnipeg with a car belonging to the paper. "But we lost a lot of time over that change came," sighed Miss Hind. "When Sam we used to hear when the livery men drove us about the country!"

Determination and perseverance are written deep in Miss Hind's character. "In the twenty-four years I've never had an accident and I've never started out to go any place I haven't reached," she said. Miss Hind's mileage gives force to this statement. Last Summer, an average year, she traversed 4,700 miles on gasoline.

Though she visits such vast expanses she does it all thoroughly, and when she returns from her annual tour she knows more about Western Canada's wheat crop and farming conditions generally than any other individual on the face of the earth. The accuracy of her forecasts has several times been little short of miraculous.

For instance, her estimate in 1906 was 85,000,000 bushels, and the crop was 84,504,857; in 1907 her estimate was 71,250,000, and the output, 78,222,584; in 1909 her estimate of 118,109,000 compared with actual yield of 116,719,000. One of these guesses would be dismissed as a fluke, but when they parade year after year they arouse the admiration and astonishment of every grain man in Western Canada.

Miss Hind is a westerner by adoption and inclination and nearly everything else, but she was born in Toronto. She was her mother and her mother's mother. Her father was an English sculptor. When she was only two years old she was left an orphan, and was taken to her grandfather's farm in Grey County. This chance perhaps decided her career, for her grandfather was an enthusiastic farmer and stockman.

After an education in Orillia public school and collegiate Miss Hind "went West" in 1882, and became the first stenographer between Ontario and Japan, as one journalist expressed it. She mastered the newfangled typewriters and wrote the first typewritten brief ever used in Winnipeg.

In 1893 she made her first contribution to The Free Press, for which she was to work later as agricultural and commercial reporter and then editor.

Miss Hind's article on the cattle market, on grain, on irrigation, on the reclamation of the waste grazing lands of Southern Alberta are as authoritative as those of the most proximate expert. But in her heart, Miss Hind is as much a woman as the most helpless and romantic housewife.

It comes out in her home life in Winnipeg, so her women friends of her journalistic world are fond of narrating and illustrating. But I did not need their word. Her essential femininity appeared at the close of our interview when she passed over to me the poems of Christina Willey, of whose work she spoke in warm terms.

"Can't that," she said, indicating two stanzas of the poem, "the prairie we know?"

I read them:

"The glory of sky Northern Lights,
Thy thin clear-crystal Western air,
What land can show such Summer nights,
And where is Autumn half so fair?

"Thy prairie rose, thy fields of wheat;
Sometimes I think that when I die
I'll weary of the golden street
And, even in heaven, miss thy sky!"

"I wish I could write poetry," she said, a bit wistfully. "But I'm just a plain drab at that sort of thing. Fortunately there are others who have seen and who can say those things for us."

But Miss Hind was too modest. She does not write poetry in rhyme and rhythm, but that intimate circle of friends who have received her Christmas booklets know with what grace and charm she writes poetry in prose. She brings to a conclusion one of her rare bits of reminiscence with this haunting paragraph:

"Those are some of the pictures cherished by those of the old new West, who have been privileged to travel the prairie trails in Summer heat and Winter cold, in the awakening beauty of the Springtime, the promise of Summer and the golden fulfilment of Autumn, and when we set out alone on 'the longest trail of all' we will 'go west' with great content if the soft southwest brings to us the taste of wild sage and prairie roses, the best of a thousand hills as the herds go down to water and the sibilant sigh of the wind through miles of fast ripening wheat."

Field Marshal Haig's Policy of Attrition Won the War, Says Gen. Charters

By WILLIAM L. McPHERSON

"FIELD Marshal Earl Haig," by Brigadier General John Charteris (Charles Scribner's Sons) is in part a biography and a history. In the broadest sense, however, it is a defence of Field Marshal Haig's strategy as commander-in-chief of the British armies in France and of the thesis which the Field Marshall himself subscribed to when he said that the British armies won the war.

This aspect of the book is by far the most interesting, for all the author's energy is applied to proving the validity of the so-called Western strategical point of view and defending the policy of attrition and to attributing Allied victory to a successful and ruthless application of that policy. General Charteris rightly senses that Haig's reputation as commander and his place in military history are bound up with an acceptance or rejection of the more extreme claims and doctrines of the Western school.

Field Marshal Haig was a soldier of high character and distinguished virtues. He was intensely devoted to his profession and had mastered it, as perhaps no other British officer had done, in the administrative and technical side. He had exceptional tenacity and determination, was firm in all his judgments, self-restrained, patient, and in his personal and political contacts scrupulously loyal and even magnanimous.

Never Intrigued

HE never stooped to intrigue and was never unduly disturbed or embittered by what he considered intrigues against him. He was a gentleman, without fear or reproach, physically and spiritually the beau ideal of a soldier. Whatever happened, Haig never lost his faith or his serenity.

He began the war at Mons as commander of an army corps and ended it as chief of all the British armies in France. He led the British forces to victory. Instinctively the hostility to him could never be carried to the point of recalling him. No one has criticised his strategy more thoroughly than Winston Churchill has, but Mr. Churchill, dealing in "The World Crisis, 1916-18" with his opponent's so-called war, John Bull's war, freely of him: "Alike in personal efficiency and professional credentials, Sir Douglas Haig was the first officer in the British army." And on the Field Marshal's death in 1928, Mr. Churchill called him "incomparably the finest British soldier of this fateful age, whose memory will live and grow with the grandeur of the events amid which he strove and over which in the end he ruled. As a World War figure Haig is in no danger of eclipse.

His Strategy Defended

NO new volume "Field Marshal Haig," by Brigadier General John Charteris (Charles Scribner's Sons) is in part a biography and a history. In the broadest sense, however, it is a defence of Field Marshal Haig's strategy as commander-in-chief of the British armies in France and of the thesis which the Field Marshall himself subscribed to when he said that the British armies won the war.

This aspect of the book is by far the most interesting, for all the author's energy is applied to proving the validity of the so-called Western strategical point of view and defending the policy of attrition and to attributing Allied victory to a successful and ruthless application of that policy. Never Intrigued

HE never stooped to intrigue and was never unduly disturbed or embittered by what he considered intrigues against him. He was a gentleman, without fear or reproach, physically and spiritually the beau ideal of a soldier. Whatever happened, Haig never lost his faith or his serenity.

He began the war at Mons as commander of an army corps and ended it as chief of all the British armies in France. He led the British forces to victory. As a World War figure Haig is in no danger of eclipse.

Author Replies to Critics

THIS attitude in 1915, after the first failures of the "nibbling" programme and the dissatisfaction which they aroused in Great Britain, is thus emphasized by the author:

"The government wished for rapid and decisive strategical results; they sought a short cut to success, which they believed could not be achieved through a repetition of the costly battles of 1914. Acting as spokesman for many of his colleagues, Mr Winston Churchill condemned as 'Turtle and sterile the efforts in this West where the great armies of the Allies, locked in battle with the main forces of their adversaries were slowly but surely eating away the very heart of Germany's strength. Mr. Winston Churchill and his supporters not unnaturally measured success or failure with dividers on a map and gave no thought to the teaching of military history throughout the ages.

"Haig, though not in a position either to assist for, or to offer an official opinion, had no doubts of the correct and effective policy, and he had many opportunities of giving unofficial expression to his views. He contended that there was nothing abnormal in the long and fluctuating wearing-out battles. He had taught in peace what he now perceived in war. The great war—like all others—would not be won until the spirit of the German people was conquered and the will to fight extinguished and this could only be achieved by the defeat of her main armies massed in the West. Her resistance must be worn down by a continuous battering on her frontier from the strategic centre of France and Belgium, until the time came for the delivery of the decisive blow."

So the war of attrition continued through 1915, through the holocaust on the Somme in 1916 and through the many bloody battles of 1917, at the end of which no decision was in sight and Germany was even in a position to resume the offensive on the Western front.

Battles Viewed as One

MANIFESTLY the strategic failure of those campaigns had to be covered up and this was done through putting out the idea that they were all pre-determined parts of one continuous battle, fully justified, therefore, in spite of their meager results. This theory is cleverly exaggerated in Haig's final dispatch which says

"Neither the course of the war itself nor the military lessons to be drawn therefrom can properly be comprehended, unless the long succession of battles commenced on the Somme in 1916 and ended in November of last year on the Sambre, are viewed as forming part of one great and continuous engagement.

"To direct attention to any single phase of that stupendous and incessant struggle and seek in it the explanation of our success, to the exclusion or neglect of other phases—possibly less striking in their immediate or obvious consequences—is in my opinion to risk the formation of unsound doctrines regarding the character and requirements of modern war.

In former battles (the clear little wearing-down period) has rarely lasted more than a few days, and has often been completed in a few hours.

"When armies of millions are engaged, with the resources of great empires behind them, it will inevitably be long. It will include resident crises of fighting which, viewed separately and apart from the general perspective, will appear individually as great indecisive battles. The launching and destruction of Napoleon's last reserves at Waterloo was a matter of minutes.

Perspective Emphasized

IN this World War the great sortie of the beleaguered German armies, commenced on March 21, 1918, lasted for four months, yet it represents a corresponding stage in a single colossal battle. If the whole operations of the present war are regarded in correct perspective the victories of the Summer and Autumn of 1918 will be seen to be as directly dependent upon the two years of stubborn fighting that preceded them."

The fallacy here is obvious. The war was not merely a single wearing-down battle on the Western front. There were several fronts, on which one side pitted its strength against the other. The Allies were more successful in 1916 on the Eastern front than they were on the Western. The primary object of Allied strategy in 1915 and 1916 was to establish secure and easy communications with Russia, in order to utilize Russia's vast resources in man power.

Had the Dardanelles been open in 1915 Russia could probably have been kept in the war to the end as a commanding factor. Bulgaria would not have sided with the Teutonic powers. Greece and Rumania would have joined the Allies much earlier than they did. Siberia would not have been overrun by enemy armies and the Allies might have fought the war to victory on their own resources.

Lost Access to Russia

THE Allied effort on the Western front did not insure access to Russia and did not prevent Russia, isolated and unable to arm and munition her forces, from drifting to military exhaustion. When the revolution came and Russia gradually faded out of the picture as an ally, attrition on the Western front had little or nothing to show with which to neutralize the defection.

There is no reason to think that in 1917 the other Allied powers could have beaten Germany unaided, thanks to the wearing-down process. The best they could hope for was a stalemate and a negotiated peace which, on the basis of results up to that date, could not not have been highly favorable to the Teutonic alliance.

Germany herself invited defeat by resuming unrestricted submarine warfare on February 1, 1917. Thus she forced the United States into the war on the side of the Allies just as Russia was about to stop fighting. The war was lost to the Germans.

General Charteris refers contemptuously to Mr. Winston Churchill's arrangement of the continuous Great Britain of the Haig-Robertson attrition strategy. But he never mentions the British losses in the Somme campaign or in the expensive trench warfare operations of 1917. The great battles of the Somme, Arras, Messines, Passchendaele and Cambrai were fought for the purpose of wearing the Germans down. But Mr. Churchill's study of the British and German casualty statistics shows that these battles resulted in 1,241,487 British casualties and only 860,819 Germans.

Casualties Contrasted

IN all the Western campaigns, from August, 1914 to November, 1918, the German casualties were 3,383,000, whereas the French casualties were 4,974,000 and the British 3,796,000. American Belgian, Italian and Portuguese casualties on the Western front are to be added to the Allied total.

The Germans reported on all fronts were 7,080,000—less than the French and British losses on the Western front alone, which were 7,846,000.

These figures demonstrate the wastefulness of the usury policy, lauded by Haig, Robertson and Joffre. That usury was one-sided and greatly to the disadvantage of the Allies. It would have left them too weak at the end of it to finish off Germany had not the United States been dragooned into the war by Ludendorff's renewed "nibbling" blunder. It was the merest justice that Marshal Foch said of this war of attrition that "if a war is to end in victory it should always be invested with a character different from this."

Foch made this remark in the preface which he wrote to Mr. Douglas Hurd's Dispatches, when they appeared in book form. General Charteris does not allude to that criticism, but his attitude toward Foch is patronizing and depreciatory. He intimates that Foch's judgment of the possibilities of victory in 1918 was faulty and that the vigor of the Allied offensive after July 18, 1918, was due to Haig rather than to Foch. He also claims that Haig and the British armies won the war on the Western front.

Author's Estimate of Haig

IN the final chapter of his book the author advances this estimate of Field Marshal Haig:

"As one examines the history of Haig's decisions and actions throughout the war, they seem not so great as to be a single one of importance in his leadership of the army, in the course which he adopted, in the plans which he formed, or in the methods whereby he gave execution to his plans, in which it is possible to say that Haig's judgment was at fault or his action in error. Judged by this test, it may fairly be anticipated that when the final record is written, the final judgment given, Haig will stand out alone and without rival as the greatest of the great soldiers who led the armies of their country to battle in the gigantic conflict waged in France and Belgium."

Hart's Judgment Recalled

THIS is a high tribute of personal loyalty, but hardly a considered conclusion of military criticism. Without offence another British Judgment—that of Captain B. H. Liddell Hart, a military student—may be set beside it. In his book, which appeared last year, "Reputations Ten Years After," this writer said:

"Haig at least was far more than a Joffre. His obstinacy was due to mental limits, not to pure ignorance, and he was never the catspaw of subtler brains. As an executive commander there has hardly been a more defensive general; in contrast, among those who have earned fame as offensive generals, none, perhaps, has made worse errors. In the last phase he did much to regain his reputation, but the scope for more than method and determination was not wide. His mind was dominated by the instinct of method, a valuable asset, where he failed was in the instinct of surprise in its widest sense—originality of conception, fertility of resource, receptivity to ideas."

A Slight Error

A young woman was troubled with a boil on her knee which got so bad that she was obliged to send to call in a doctor. He had formed a dislike for the family doctor, so her father suggested several others, and finally said he would call in the one who was the most unpopular case who passed the house every day.

They kept a look-out for him, and when he came along he was called in. The young woman modestly showed him the disabled member.

The little man looked at it and said: "Why, that's pretty bad."

"Well," she said, "what must I do?"

"If I were you," he answered, "I would send for a doctor. I'm a piano tuner."

Advertisers Will Pay $20 Per Ounce for Ambergris

AMONG the vanishing items of commerce is listed ambergris, a substance thrown off by whales and highly prized as a fixative for perfumes. This precious substance, scarcity of whales and the great distances to the oceanic abode of the whales make the finding of ambergris more interesting. In the to stimulate collectors this season advertisements are running in fishing and marine periodicals of the Pacific Coast. Prices offered for ambergris this season run from $12.50 to $20 an ounce. Only three recorded finds of ambergris were made last year on the West Coast.

"Then you must climb to the sixth floor, drag her to the parapet, and bracing yourself against a chimney, hurl her into space. She catches a window ledge in her fall and—"

"Suppose I drop her?" asked the actor.

"Well, you'll have to pick her up and begin over again."

Three Little Diggers

By Myrtle E. Lane

"OH, goodness!" cried Bobby, as a tiny spray of water spouted from the sand directly in front of him. "What on earth was that?"

Kathryn and Marion laughed. Bobby, their cousin, lived in the country a long distance away, and this was his first visit to the seaside. He was so excited over all the wonderful things he found to see and do, that he hardly wanted to take time to sleep or even eat.

This morning the tide was out ever so far across the glistening sands.

"The big water has runned away," exclaimed little Marion. "Let's go out and catch it."

So they climbed into their bathing suits. Kathryn's was a pretty blue one with yellow stripes, Marion's was a beautiful pink and green one; while Bobby's was a very new one of red and white.

"My dress little Teddy bears!" laughed Aunt Margaret, when they lined up ready to go.

Such a jolly time they had spinning about in the warm, shallow pools between the sandbars.

They hunted for tiny, baby crabs under shells and pebbles. Kathryn picked them up, but Bobby didn't like the feel of them in his hands. He wasn't keen about the teeny weeny fishes darting about his toes, either. But, of course, he kept quiet about—it. The girls laughed enough at him, as it was.

At last, tired of swimming and playing in the water, they rolled about on the hot sand—but to get dry and warm again.

It was after they had gone some distance out across the sands that Bobby was startled to the water flying up into his face.

Goodness, Kath, what is it, anyway?" he repeated, as he leaned down to look at the queer pipe-stem sticking out of the sand.

"Just an ol' clam!" laughed Kathryn.

Clam!" he exclaimed. "Do clams live in the sand?" he asked, surprised.

"Course they do, silly," she answered him impatiently. Bobby was so very "ignunt," at least about the ways of the seaside, anyway.

"Let's dig for it," suggested Bobby, "I want to see what it looks like."

"Oh, let's," chimed the girls, "and perhaps a little will make us some clam soup for dinner."

Now Kathryn had helped dig clams many times before, so she felt she knew quite a bit about it.

She knelt down and began to scoop out the sand with her hands, forming a circle around the clam a short distance away from it.

"We mustn't disturb it," she explained," or it will slide down right out of sight, quick as wink."

Bobby was digging away as fast as he could on the opposite side of the clam, when sure enough, it drew in its neck and started to go down.

"Quick, catch hold of it!" shouted Kathryn, grabbing for it herself at the same time.

"I've got it!" they cried together. Then they began to laugh. They had merrily caught hold of each other's hands. Mrs. Clam had disappeared.

"We'll find another one," declared Kathryn, philosophically.

Bobby had no idea where to look for them, but Kathryn showed him the holes in the sand with the pieces of seaweed around them. He darted about, delighted, poking at the necks just to see them squirt water, and then sink down into the ground. Little Marion ran around with him.

Kathryn tried valiantly to dig up first one and then another clam in the sand, but they were too fast for her. She felt almost cross about it.

"Bobby," she called out, finally," do come and help me with this ol' clam."

"All right," agreed Bobby, ashamed that he had left her to work for herself. He plumped down opposite her on the sand, and commenced to dig. Marion said she wanted to help, too, but she found the digging very hard work, and had to take frequent rests.

They had made quite a trench around the clam, when suddenly it began to sink. Quick as a flash Bobby grabbed for its neck.

"Hooray," he shouted, "I've got it!"

"Good for you, Bobby. Now hold on very tight," cried Kathryn, scraping the sand away from the clam as fast as her hands could fly.

"If you'll stay by me while I dig, I'm sure we'll get it this time!" she said. At last she could feel the hard shell.

"Oh, goody!" she exclaimed, excitedly. "Now, hang on, Bobby. We're almost there!"

"I think Mrs Clam must be trying to slide down to China," panted Bobby, as he string stubbornly to its neck. His arms ached terribly, but he wasn't going to lose that clam, not if he could help it.

With a final heave the clam came away from the sand, its neck stretched at great length.

"Gracious, what a whopper!" exclaimed Bobby. He had no idea it would be so huge.

"It's a horse clam," Kathryn told him.

"I s'pose they call it that 'cause it can pull so hard," he laughed.

"Let's get some more of them," he insisted. They set to work again and managed to dig up two more big ones. By that time they were hot and tired. So, carrying one each, they set off for home across the sands.

Aunt Margaret was delighted with the clams, and busied herself preparing them for dinner.

"Numie, numi!" sighed Bobby, after a second plateful. "Clams are good. And to think we wouldn't have had any if Kath hadn't persuaded me to stick to the digging when I wanted to quit."

"That's right, Bobby," agreed Aunt Margaret. "We usually do have to stick to the digging if we want to accomplish anything worth while in this world."

The Pioneer Women of Vancouver Island

SCHOOL is over. The busiest housewife breathes a sigh of relief as she wakes in the morning and realizes that there is no need for hurry. She may take time in the sunny afternoons to read the books that have been long neglected. Schoolgirls lay aside the satchels that hold these volumes they have carried over and over for the past ten months. Some of them fancy they will never want to read again.

In many a household some of the members are preparing to go camping at the seaside, by the lake or in the woods. There, with all the difference between the nineteen-twenties and the twenties century, they will live again the life of the pioneers.

If the women, young or old, want to realize the difference between their play and the real life the first settlers on this Pacific Coast lived, they should take with them to camp the stories written for the Women's Canadian Club by N de Bertrand Lugrin and edited by Mr John Hosie, Provincial librarian and archivist. All these long names should not frighten anyone. The true stories Mrs. Shaw tells us are as bright as the little lady who appears in print under her girlhood's name. Perhaps there are not enough of the books left to fill all the corners in the camp furniture of those who would like to read them, for the first edition was limited.

Let us peep into the volume as it lies before us this Summer day. How many dreams we could weave about the tale of Mrs. Barkley, the brave little lady who came with her husband and two babies to the wild West Coast.

To follow the wanderings and adventures of the girl-wife who became Lady Douglas should stir the dullest imagination. There are still living among us ladies who remember her as the kind and gracious hostess of Government House, though day by day their number is growing less.

Elisa Anderson, the little girl who came all the way, through New Caledonia and across the Straits to Fort Victoria with her brother to go to school to the very first teacher, Mrs. Staines, has a story that ends with a splendid wedding. We would like to know more about the teacher and her pupils.

As one turns over the pages it is sad to know that in the short time since the book was written some of these pioneer women have left forever the beautiful city they helped to make. Among these is Mrs. Edward Mohun, who told the author a most interesting story of early days in the Province that is now British Columbia.

There are many families in Victoria who could add pages to the story of Mrs. Cridge, the kind wife of the good Dundas, who was so greatly beloved. Many, too, will remember the daughters of that fine old gentleman, Roderick Finlayson, and will read eagerly the story of one of them, Mrs. J. C. Keith.

Brave women were the wives of the coal miners who went to Port Rupert and afterwards founded Nanaimo. Mrs. Robert Dunsmuir Gregor and Mrs. Dunsmuir faced danger from the ravage Indians as well as endured great fully privation and loneliness. There were thrills enough in their lives to satisfy any newspaper. Then there is the tale of sorrow that brought one of these brave women to what for many years was known as Dunsmuir Castle. This is only touched upon.

More like the lives of the pioneers of Eastern Canada were those of the women in the districts of Saanich, Metchosin and Sooke. The word pictures painted of their homes and sometimes of themselves are finely and sympathetically done. Throughout the book there are touches of kindly humor that add to the enjoyment of the reader, nor should the book be less attractive because it is a valuable contribution to the history of our Province. That its perusal will add to the many recreations of this holiday time is the hope of your editor.

The Bravery of a Harrow Boy

WINSTON Churchill, Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Baldwin Government, is a famous man. He has distinguished himself as war correspondent, as the First Lord of the Admiralty, as author, soldier and statesman. Perhaps he never did a greater or a braver thing than when he was a little boy in public school of Harrow. The story is told by an old schoolmate, the Rev. Bigge Stogdon, who says:

"In those days boys were very nervous about being seen walking with a lady in the street," he says. "If your mother wrote to ask if she could come down to see you, you told her what had to wear, and if her figure was beyond the accepted standard you suggested postponement; above all, there should be no form of endearment."

But young Winston Churchill cared nothing for such conventions. He invited his old nurse down for a day at Harrow and he walked the streets arm-in-arm with her, although she was very fat and wore a comical poke-bonnet.

It must have been a great shock to the boys who were not brave enough to walk arm-in-arm with their own mothers.

The Ugly Duckling's Story

He gave a loud cry. It was a queer sound to him. He had never made it before. But the birds did not hear him and they flew on out of sight.

Then the long, cold Winter came. The duckling found it hard to get food and he was lonely and cold and hungry.

But after a while the sunshine began to feel warm.

The grass grew green and the Duckling began to feel happy and glad to be alive. His wings now were strong and he flew across the woods to a large pond.

There he saw the beautiful birds that he had seen in the Fall. "How I would like to be with them," he said, "but I am ugly and they will not want me."

Coal—Condensed Sunshine

By MARIAN O. RANDLE

GARDINER lay on a rug before the fireplace, watching the dancing flames. Like all children he loved to watch the magic pictures come and go in the red, flickering light. But on this night, about which I am going to tell you, the strangest thing happened.

Mother had looked in and reminded him that it was bedtime. He intended to get up, but the minutes slipped by and he still lay there. The fire seemed to take on a rosy glow like the sky when the sun is about to rise in the morning. Then it burned up fiercer and brighter as the sun flames when he rides through the heavens till noonday. Gardiner could even see the sun-god's golden chariot in the flames, and, just then, out hopped a little red coal, all on its own, and settled on the tiles.

The Live Coal Speaks

"HULLO, Gardiner," it said in a soft, glowy voice. "I'd come on the rug with you but I know I'd burn a hole in it. I'm so hot!"

"I didn't know live coals could talk, Gardiner remarked, half to himself. "But, after all, why shouldn't they, since they're alive?" Oddly enough it did not seem out of the way. Then to the coal

"Have you a name? I'm so glad you can talk to me! I've often wanted to know why you get so hot and why you make such a bright light when you burn. Because, before you are put on the fire you seem just a rough, shiny black stone."

"I'm not a stone. I'll have you know," answered the coal hotly. "My name is Anthracite. There are several families of us—Bituminous (they are soft) and the Lignites, poor stuff, indeed. Although you'd hardly believe it, we are directly descended from sunlight."

"Sunlight!" ejaculated Gardiner. "How I know! Why, when you burn, you make the loveliest sunlight! Oh, that's why you glow so brightly! Now I know. It's the sunshine coming back. But how did you get black and hard like that?"

Anthracite answered by asking another question: "Would you like to hear my story?"

"Oh, yes," cried the boy, squirming with delight. "I love stories, 'specially if they're true."

Anthracite's Story

"ONCE upon a time," began Anthracite—"for that is the way all stories should start—once upon a time the earth was much more humid than it is today—"

"What does humid mean?" interrupted Gardiner.

"Humid means moist or damp. You see, it rained a great deal and the plants and trees grew to immense sizes. The sun shone down and gave them food and warmth. The stems and leaves were strong and healthy. When they died they decayed on the place where they fell. That made the soil richer and the new plants and trees grew even larger. When they died, they decayed in the same way. Each new growth was richer because of the rotted plants which made up the soil in which they had root.

"This went on for thousands of years and in some places there were great depths of rich, black material.

Another Change

"THEN something caused the surface of the earth to shrink and form hollows and ridges."

"Like this rug that's all wrinkled up?" suggested Gardiner.

"Very much," resumed Anthracite. "In many of the hollows were these rich beds of decayed matter. Rivers washed down stones and gravel, and new earth formed over the top. Finally the beds were completely covered and were pressed beneath the earth, shut away from the sun for thousands of years, like a secret hidden from the eyes of everyone.

"Then, through one way and another, such as landslides or earthquakes, parts of these beds were uncovered. But now, instead of a soft, dark matter, it was a hard, black, brittle rock-like substance. Men found it and learned that by throwing it on burning wood it would catch fire itself and give out light and heat. And so, that which took thousands of years to form would be destroyed in a few minutes."

Gardiner had noticed that Anthracite was growing paler and paler, and his voice was becoming fainter and fainter. As he finished, his voice sank away in a whisper.

Mother Comes

THE door opened and Mother looked in.

"Gardiner, why aren't you in bed? Have you been dozing in front of the fire?"

Gardiner rubbed his eyes. Had he indeed, been asleep and dreamed it all? But, no—there was the ash—the remains of poor Anthracite, on the tile where he had stood. It was all, then, quite true.

As he tumbled into bed his mother was surprised to hear him mumble

"Oh, boy, thousands of years old, yet he only lasted about half an hour. Poor Anthracite."

The River

Why hurry, little river,
Why hurry to the sea?
There is nothing there to do
But sink into the blue
And all forgotten be.
There is nothing on that shore
But the lides forevermore
And the faint and far-off line
Where the winds across the brine
Forever, ever roam
And never find a home

Why hurry, little river,
Prom the mountains and the mead,
Where the graceful elms are sleeping
And the quiet rattle feed?
The loving shadows cool
The deep and restful pool,
And every tribute stream
Brings its own sweet woodland dream
Of the mighty woods that sleep
Where the sighs of earth are deep,
And the silent skies look down
On the savage mountain's frown.

Oh, linger, little river,
Your banks are all so fair;
Each morning is a hymn of praise,
Each moonlight is a prayer.
All day the sunbeams glitter
On your shallows and your brers
And at night the dear God stills you
With the music of the stars.

The Adventures of Peanuts and Popcorn

Popcorn: Mister, mister, never heart, Or you will surely be left at the post.

LAST Sunday, after fighting all day like a pair of wild cats, Peanuts was put in the basement for a few minutes peace, and when time came for her to go to bed, she was nowhere to be found. She never turned up until noon on the Monday, and then she was left until evening. She was put back in the room and did not want to go, and objected very much. A visit was then paid to the box she had been found in, and right in the centre of a woven quilt, in a nest lined with about four sheets of The Colonist, all nicely chewed up, were four little baby squirrels. She was returned to the basement, for three days, and then Pop was given quarters in the bottom cage, and Peanuts and her family put in the upstairs cage. The nest had to be broken up, and the paper put in the Japanese orange box, and some of the wool covered over, as the youngsters put in whilst their mother was feeding. When she got in the cage, she at once lifted out one of the young ones by catching it by the skin of the back with her teeth. She tried to carry it back to the basement, but soon returned it to the new home.

It was thought that she might kill them, as is done by cats and rabbits sometimes When born they are completely naked, of a pink color, and with two big blue lumps on on the head, where the eyes will be after nine days. They were three-quarters of an inch long, and at the end of seven days were two inches long, and growing like weeds. They look like little pigs, with their bare tails. They have already grown short whiskers. There are three girls and one boy. They grunt like piglets, too.

Popcorn: "Oh, dear, girls are more expensive to raise. Now, mister, what about a little news of our doings, eh?"

The Boss: "Wait, sonny, till I tell the readers that these are supposed to be the first tame squirrels ever born in cage-in-city."

Popcorn: "Three hearty British cheers. Now I suppose I'll have to go out to work now to support this big family. It is going to be some job finding names for the lot! I think some of the young readers should be asked to help, by sending in lists of names to the Editor. You put that in, mister, will you."

The Boss: "I will. Now about Pop's trip to the Solarium a few weeks ago. He want in his own words."

Popcorn (sitting on Miss Romans' veranda, nibbling honeysuckle blooms): "Tell them I don't need any battery, mister."

The Boss: "You will need an ambulance if Miss Romans sees what you are doing." On the ferry, going to Mill Bay, Pop ran his car up and down the ferry deck, and Mai Miss Jean Pfeving, of New Westminster, and some members of the Workmen's Compensation Board. He also met Chief Clows, of the Sa Cascade. At the Solarium he saw a sign which read: "No persons suffering with colds allowed on these premises." He met Mrs. Hutcheon, the school teacher, and she took him out to the veranda where the children were at their lessons. Pop ran his car up and down, turned somersaults, and the children, who were in their bathing suits, kept shouting to the Boss. "Man, show me nine tiger; I can't see him." Pop was lifted up for the children to see who could not move in bed. Cliff Newell came along in a wheel chair, and Pop laughed, because he thought it was not some of his Bardsley Boschal

Popcorn: "Mister, tell the readers about the children's rosy cheeks, brown bodies, straw-colored hair, and their sky blue eyes. You remember telling me they were China blue eyes."

The Boss: "Well, you've just told them. One little chap had curly flaxen hair, and walked with steel supports strapped to his legs. He was so entirely bright in each Pop he fell over three or four times, and the others following fell over him. It was like a Rugby match.

Pop saw a real little Indian baby, and a little Russian baby in the next ward. One little maeal offered Pop a pea-pod made of plasticine. It was open and had four make-believe peas inside.

Popcorn: "Do you remember, Mister, that little boy also called me a 'tiger'. When we came out, you kept saying "Well, well, did you ever see such blue eyes before?"

Squirrelville Locals

MR. F. Douglass-Chickarne in his runabout, visited Bay Street Primary School the other noon. The lady principal welcomed the distin-guished guest, and escorted him to the several rooms. After demon-strating the runabout, Pop gave an ex-hib-ition of high jumping, and played tag with the boss. The following children were introduced: Div. I—Kathleen Riley, Billy Osborn; Div. II—Eva Mason, Geoffrey Fielding; Div. III—Jimmy Robinson, Dorothy Adams; Div. IV—Rose Anderson, Howard Rowbottom.

On Friday, Miss Dorothy Baugh held the four babies on a piece of fur whilst the Boss secured a photo of them.

Mrs. F. Douglass-Chickarne exercised outdoors each day from 6 to 7 p.m. during the week. Whilst she was absent, Donald Haugh and Jimmy Gray saw the young ones for the first time.

During the week the Chickarne family tasted their first cherries and cherries. These were much enjoyed.

A Nature Story From Yorkshire

THIS story of an unusual nesting-place for blackbirds, and a remarkable confidence, comes from a West Riding village.

We congratulate our correspondent on her success in winning the confidence of these birds so completely. The site of the nest is more remarkable than the height, for an unsheltered nest is very unusual, as the hen blackbird, who makes the choice, is always naturally timorous, however companionable the mate bird may be.

Throughout the Winter, without missing a day, I fed among other feathered friends a large fat blackbird.

Soon he grew very tame and trustful. He was far too cosseted to feed with the sparrows and starlings, but took his meals alone on the window-sill. During the very cold weather, if I did not feed him as soon as he arrived he would peck at the window-pane.

As the days passed he grew more and more tame till he would eat crumbs at my feet, and frequently he hopped into the kitchen and helped himself to whatever might be found on the table.

Later he found a mate, and brought a timid, shy, speckled hen-bird with him to meals.

Presently we discovered a little heap of hay and straw on the ledge of one of our bedroom window-sills. The middle pane of the window is often open, as the room is always occupied. It would have been easy to brush away the straw, but we left it, for we discovered it belonged to the blackbirds and they had chosen that place for their nest.

They worked hard and soon completed the nest, and then four eggs were laid. Undisturbed by the opening and shutting of the window, by the glare of electric lights being switched on and off, by the noise of sweeping in the room, or by curious eyes gazing at her every few hours, Mrs. Blackbird hatched out two of the eggs.

The fledglings are delightful little birds growing very quickly indeed, and their parents are wonderfully proud of them. It is most interesting to watch them being fed, generally with worms.

I think the site of the nest must be unique for blackbirds. Usually they build not more than five or six feet from the ground and are at pains to hide the nest. Not this nest! It is more than twelve feet above the ground and wholly unprotected. People are astonished at its position, and think the birds are exceptionally plucky and trustful.—Children's Newspaper.

Learn to Swim This Summer

NOW that school is over and the warm weather has come, learn to swim, boys and girls. If you can return a little practice till you are a good, strong swimmer. It is splendid exercise and it may help you to save someone's life.

Now this does not mean that you ought to go into the water alone stay in it very long or swim where the water is icy cold. Experienced swimmers may do these things, though the more one knows about swimming the more careful they are, as a rule, not to run foolish risks.

A great many kids in Victoria know how to swim and many girls as well. Some of these have saved lives already. They have shown that they are ready to risk their own lives and Victoria is very proud of them. But not all who go out in boats could help themselves or others if they were suddenly thrown into the water. It is often these helpless people who endanger their own and others lives by rocking the boat or doing other such silly things. Sometimes silly young people give a false alarm when on or near the water. The consequence is that after a time no one pays attention to cries which may be signs of real danger. It is the best plan for the swimmer to run the risk of being deceived. It is not he or she who is being made a fool of if there is no danger.

But apart from the service a swimmer can render to others, the exercise, the cool water and the clean air make the body strong. A few people cannot stand the shock of the cold water. In such a case a doctor's advice should be sought. But the great majority of children and young people should learn to swim.

The Siren of the Madrid

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM
Illustrated by Rex Maxon

I KNEW that something was wrong the moment I parked my car under a cluster of eucalyptus and palm trees and advanced to the picturesque entrance of the best cafe upon the Riviera. Louis met me as usual upon the threshold. It is true, but what a Louis! Up till a month before, when I had last seen him, he was, as he had always been, the predominant spirit of the place, suave, bland, with a smile and voice of an ambassador. To hear him suggesting a luncheon was a poem, a dinner an epic. And now! I shook hands with him as was my custom after a somewhat prolonged absence, and, although his eyes seemed to be begging me to ignore his changed appearance, I felt compelled to refer to it.

"Why, what's the matter, Louis?" I asked.

"Influenza, sir," he replied—"a nasty bout of it. You wish your usual table, sir, of course—offer the cocktail."

He departed for a moment, returning with a menu. I could scarcely remove my eyes from him. His complexion was grey, he had lost flesh. There was a stoop about his neck, a haunted look in his eyes. His clothes were as faultless as ever, but they fitted him no longer. He was like the ghost of himself.

"The whitefish are good, sir," he suggested, "or there is a small lobster. And I have some breast of lamb I was keeping specially—too small for more than one person—some early strawberries and red wine, and a cheese from our own dairy."

"That sounds all right, Louis," I assented, trying not to look at him too curiously.

"The Montrachet 1914, of course, sir," he concluded. "Will it be the lobster or the whitefish?"

"The lobster," I decided. "I will be there, say, in ten minutes."

"Everything will be ready, sir," Louis promised, making his escape.

I turned to the barman.

"What has happened to Louis?"

"We are all wondering that, sir," the man replied. "He had a bout of influenza, but nothing that ought to have pulled him down like that. Looks as though he were being worried to death."

"But what worry can he have?" I persisted. "He must have a large income; he's a single man, and he doesn't even gamble, so far as I know. Why, last time I saw him, he was thinking of buying a new limousine."

Expected Arrives

PRESENTLY made my way to my table. The Madrid, notwithstanding its great reputation, is not a large restaurant. I inquired of the waiter who served me—Louis seemed to be keeping a little in the background—as to the whereabouts of the proprietor.

"Monsieur is in Paris," he confided. "Louis is left in sole charge. Monsieur is negotiating for the purchase of a restaurant in the Champs Elysees."

I began my luncheon. Presently the arrival of another guest attracted my attention, and I looked up. She made her way to the table already prepared, ushered in that direction by Louis—a very tall, fair woman, large almost to unpuissance, fleshy of complexion, elaborately dressed, making those efforts that always possess a leaven of the pitiful to restrain the freshness and air of youth. She leaned upon a stick, and a colorless-looking maid who followed her carried a small Pekingese. Louis placed a chair for the dog, as Madame somewhat ponderously seated herself. She thanked him with a gracious smile, motioned him to lean down, and began a whispered conversation. Louis fidgeted a little, bowed, and hurried off to obey the summons of an imaginary client. Madame commenced her meal.

She finished her pint of champagne early in the meal and called for another and, after each course, she summoned Louis. So far as it was in her nature to be gracious, she was gracious to Louis. When I left, Louis was lurking just outside behind the orchestra.

I took him by the shoulder, and made him pass across the threshold with me.

"What is the matter with you, Louis?" I asked bluntly.

"The grippe—" he began.

"Don't tell me anything more about that grippe," I interrupted. "There's something on your mind, man. You're ill mentally. What is it?"

He groaned.

"It's nothing, monsieur," he assured me.

"Who is that terrible old woman?"

"It is Madame la Comtesse de Cravonet. Very nice—very nice indeed. She has taken a suite in the hotel. She has a servant to wait when she dines in her salon, a maid for herself, a maid for the dog, two chauffeurs, and a secretary. She is very rich—a wonderful client!"

"A widow?" I inquired.

Chance to Escape

LOUIS inclined his head. Some visitors had just arrived. He seemed to welcome the chance to escape.

"You will excuse me, sir," he begged. "I hope we will see you again before long."

Three days later I approached the restaurant. For once, Louis was not upon the threshold to meet me. I gathered the reason as soon as I entered. I was a little later than on my previous visits, and Madame la Comtesse was already monopolizing his attention. Presiding over the service of the feast—and from what I could see it was indeed a feast—was Louis, who scarcely found time to cast a glance in my direction.

"And how is he today, Monsieur Louis?" I inquired of the barman.

"Just the same, sir," he replied, pouring out my cocktail.

"Madame la Comtesse has company," I remarked.

Charles looked down the room.

"That is her secretary," he confided. "He generally has his meals in the hotel, but occasionally Madame invites him to lunch. The gentleman opposite is her lawyer. He comes over once a week from Marseilles."

"Why, Charles," I demanded, "does Louis allow himself to be worried to death by that woman?"

"I suppose she gives good tips," I ventured.

Charles became impressive.

"Every Monday morning there are two hundred-franc notes for me. What Louis gets, no one can imagine, but besides money he has had, I know, a gold cigarette case, a platinum watch and chain and two sets of studs. It is a conquest Louis has made, sir, without a doubt."

Just at that moment Louis caught sight of me and, with a menu in his hand, came hurrying forward.

"Well, what have you for me today, Louis?" I enquired.

He suggested a simple luncheon, as usual, with due regard to my tastes.

"How long is Madame la Comtesse staying with you?" I asked.

"As long as she is satisfied, I imagine, sir," he replied, "or until the end of the season. If she wishes to stay on, I suppose Monsieur Leon will keep the hotel open. She is not an ordinary client."

No Wrong Ideas

HE gave an order to a subordinate who was hovering around, and then he leaned a little nearer to me.

"Monsieur Forester," he begged, "do not, please, have any wrong ideas. I am not in good health. Madame la Comtesse is very gracious; she is a wonderful client. We are all—the whole staff—myself included—very grateful to her."

Madame ate with the appetite of a grenadier. The legal gentleman with Madame who came from Marseilles, with his napkin tucked under his collar, was already flushed with his efforts.

The lawyer had apparently brought news that was interesting to both his companions. Once he drew from his pocket a sheet of paper covered with figures, at which they all looked, and raised their glasses. I gathered that some of Madame's investments had prospered, and that this was a feast of celebration. Anyhow, when I left, at three o'clock, they were still there.

I completed my business in Nice, dined at a small restaurant in a back street, listening to the wines and food, but, alas, now known to all the world, and made my way to the Casino. Without being in any sense of the word a gambler, I enjoy my occasional games of chemin de fer, and this evening was no exception. I won a little over a mille, turned in at the bar for a final whisky and soda, went in search of my car, and started off for Monte Carlo.

As a rule, I take the lower road, but that evening, remembering that it was opera night, and warned by the lights flashing all the way ahead of me along the curving road, I turned up to the left just short of the hospital and made my way on to the Middle Corniche, which at that time of night was almost deserted.

Arrived at the highest point in the road, I paused to admire the view—the blaze of lights from one of the dark-hulled men-of-war in Villefranche Harbor, the long arm of the Cap Ferrat stretching into the sea, the glitter of the waning moonlight on the Mediterranean. Presently I lit a cigarette, and proceeded on my way.

I had scarcely gone another two miles when I met with adventure. I had turned a sharp corner, just short of the tunnel, when I saw a couple of cars drawn up, and two or three men standing in the middle of the road. At the sight of my lights, one of them started at once to meet me, striking out his arm. I slowed down, imagining an accident, and came to a standstill at his gesture. A moment later I recognized it, for underneath his disorder, black hat the man who had accosted me wore a mask, which he had at first concealed with his hand, and a few feet from my hood I found myself looking down the barrel of an automatic pistol.

"Stop your engine!" the man ordered, speaking in husky English, but with a decidedly French accent.

I obeyed promptly. There have been times in my life when I have been forced into adventure, and I have never unduly shrunk from it. I fully realized, however, that this was an occasion when discretion was called for.

"What else do you want from me?" I inquired, thinking with some dismay of that mille note in my pocketbook.

"Nothing," was the curt reply. "Descend from your car, and remain at the side of the way there. Pas till Bien!"

"You permit that I smoke a cigarette?" I inquired, raising one my arms.

He had swung suddenly round, and I certainly have never disliked the look of a weapon more than his. At the sight of my harmless cigarette case however, he relaxed.

"Monsieur is not afraid?" he asked.

"Horribly," I confessed. "You have never hurt anyone yet, have you, if you are the same gang who robbed the Duc de Nimes and Monsieur de Palleron a few weeks ago?"

"It is the wish of the Chief that we should carry on our affairs without violence," the man announced, with a faint sneer, "but we should never hesitate to use force toward unreasonable people. There is a gentleman in the car there who narrowly escaped a bullet through his head. I think he has even wisdom now."

There were signs of a breaking up of the little party ahead. Two of the men, both in evening dress, and one whose figure was, I fancied, familiar to me, stepped back into the car headed for Monte Carlo, two of the others entered the limousine pointed in my direction, a third man planted himself a few feet from the chauffeur of the former car. A moment later there was a roar of a powerful engine, and the limousine, starting at a tremendous speed, dashed past us. I could see nothing of its two men inside, but I knew something about automobiles, and the lines of this one intrigued me. It was out of sight almost at once.

"And now?" I asked.

"You can go in a few minutes," my guardian conceded.

Apparently convinced of my reasonableness, he strolled away to where a couple of motor bicycles were propped against the bank turned on the lights of one, and started the engine. He wheeled it to the side of my car, and mounted upon it.

"As a matter of curiosity," I inquired, "what would happen if another car came up?"

"There are not many who use this road at night. If a car should come, what we did would depend upon you. If you attempted to halt it, or signal to it in any way, I should first shoot you in the leg—not to make too serious an affair of it—afterward I should shoot through two of the tires of the car, and bid you all good evening."

"An amiable programme!" I observed. "And supposing any of the occupants of the car were armed?"

The man shrugged his shoulders.

"One must risk something," he admitted.

Companions in Misfortune

THE minutes passed. He took out his watch.

"I, too, glanced at the dial with fascinated eyes. As soon as he had satisfied himself as to the hour, he slipped it back into his pocket, whistled down the road, sprang on to his bicycle and left me. I watched him make mad progress toward Nice, his exhaust open, his light flaring down the road. Soon his companion followed. Twenty-five minutes passed. I started my car and drove slowly on to join my companions in misfortune. They were very frightened men, both of them, very angry. The one I recognized first was Van Nestos, an Armenian millionaire, the other an American motor manufacturer, also enormously wealthy.

"Did they get away with it?" I asked.

"A hundred thousand from me," Van Nestos confessed.

"And more than that from me," the American grunted. "Say, where's the police station at Monte Carlo, Major Forester?"

"In Monaco," I replied. "We can be there in ten minutes. Come along."

I went first so show them the way and we arrived at the Commissariat in little more than the time mentioned. My companions told their story and I mine. The listening functionary was intelligent, and gendarmes were out on their motor cycles within half an hour. Afterward Van Nestos, who was still shaking with fright and anger, insisted that I stop in at the Hotel de Paris for a drink.

"Tomorrow," he announced, "I shall offer a fifty-thousand franc reward. If the police in this part of the world are worth a dime, we'll have them."

I made my adieux.

"The police here are clever enough," I assured them, "but as are the criminals."

Of course, there was nothing else talked about from one end of the Riviera to the other for the whole of the following week but this sensational robbery on the Corniche Road. There had been two previous attempts.

This time the robbers' plans had been perfectly laid, and they seemed, so far as one could gather, to have disappeared from the face of the earth.

Van Nestos' fifty thousand francs reward remained unclaimed! I found myself studying the bills announcing the reward. Fifty thousand francs was a very useful sum of money. Yet, but for one circumstance of apparently trivial import, the criminals might as well have driven their car over the side of the road into the Mediterranean for any clue they had left behind them.

Conditions Unchanged

AS soon as the excitement of my adventure had in some measure abated, I found myself lunching again at Beaulieu. Conditions at the famous restaurant seemed unchanged. Madame with her enormous appetite, was still there, lunching alone this time. I sat her out, waited until her maid had departed with the Pekinese, and she herself had taken her leave, passing down the room between a little row of bowing waiters. She lingered at the door to talk with Louis for a few moments, but, as soon as he returned, I took him by the arm and led him out on the terrace.

"Look here Louis," I said, "everything is preying upon your mind. Do you mean to tell me that you are allowing that woman to make you miserable?"

"Monsieur is mistaken," he began——"

"No more of this, Louis," I interrupted firmly. "Tell me why you seem so worried about a shadow by that outrageous female."

He looked around so be sure that we were not overheard.

"Go on, Louis."

"Every day," he confided miserably, "it is the same. You see what she is like, monsieur—a terrible woman! She seems to have taken some absurd fancy to me. My life is becoming a burden." The man went on. "When she sends for me, I have to arrange to be fetched in a few minutes on important business. She is always asking me to dine with her at Nice. I shudder when I hear the telephone from the hotel, or when the page comes across. If she doesn't soon let me alone, Monsieur Forester, I must go—although I am earning more money than ever before in my life and I am devoted to Monsieur Leon. He will never forgive me, if by any chance, she should be offended and should leave."

I leaned across the table.

"Is this the whole truth, Louis?" I asked him earnestly.

The man's honesty was transparent.

"What more could there be?" he entreated. "Louis," I advised, "keep your mind from dwelling upon the situation. She'll give it up in time. What if I promise to bring another admirer along and distract her attention?"

"I should be Monsieur's grateful slave," Louis declared decidedly. "But it will not happen. Many of my clients here, knowing who she is, and of her wealth, have been more civil to her than I can bring myself to be. She is simply rude to them. There is another gentleman from Nice who visits her frequently, but she never brings him to me here. Her smiles are for me and me alone."

Arrives With Guests

AT my usual time—a few minutes before one—five days later I arrived with my guest, Monsieur Desrolles, of Monaco. It seldom happens, but the tables were mostly occupied my men lunching with a solitary male vis-a-vis or in parties. A few of the usual habitues of the place were there, and Mademoiselle la dansense of the moment was in a corner with her latest admirer.

At Madame la Comtesse's table were seated her secretary, her lawyer, and a third man—a Parisian, I judge from his appearance. Madame was wearing mauve, with a small hat and a tulle scarf. Her little Pekingese, too, was adorned with a bow of the same color. Louis caught me looking toward her, and glanced away.

We were half-way through our meal when a note was brought in to me. I passed it to my companion. He read it carefully, permitted me to glance at the few words, and tore it absently into pieces.

The sight of those few lines had stirred me profoundly. I looked around the place almost as one might look upon a scene in a film or a descriptive chapter in a story, not altogether sure that I myself was one of the little company.

There was the tall, dark, rather melancholy violinist, playing a waltz a few yards away from Madame, accompanied by his little orchestra; there was Charles in his white linen coat, leaning over the bar counter to catch a glimpse of a passing steamer through the window. Down the curving semicircle of the room men and women were engaged in the usual business of lunching, with here and there a staccato note of flirtation. There was a party of four, men, apparently absorbed in their food, yet with every now and then a curious watchfulness in their demeanor. An American, presently dressed, in a plain grey business suit, with a shirt and tie of alien characteristic, was entertaining two or three ladies who had apparently just landed from some steamer. The waiters passed up and down the room, swift-footed, eager and attentive.

As usual, Madame and her party were lunching profusely and demanding a great deal of attention from Louis, from his subordinate maitre d'hotel, their table waiters and the leader of the orchestra. The whole scene of the place seemed to centre about them, and with the opening of that third bottle of champagne Madame's cheeks were more flushed than ever. My companion glanced out into the gardens. Another party had arrived.

Many Loungers

THERE were loungers in front of the hotel entrance, more loungers examining the miniature aviary just outside the restaurant. But if these men, her myrmidons, had seemed to become early prey to the officers of the law it was otherwise with Madame.

Monsieur Desrolles suddenly addressed me in a lowered voice and I realized the thing was about to happen.

"Monsieur will excuse me for a moment," he begged. "It is better, perhaps—Monsieur will understand."

He rose to his feet and approached the American, who was just paying his bill. He whispered a word in his ear, to which the departing guest listened in blank amazement. Then he passed on to another group, where a man was entertaining two ladies, and finally paused before the table of Mademoiselle la dansense, and whispered also in her ear. Then he returned to me. His movements had been so unobtrusive that scarcely anyone seemed to have noticed his little detour, but he had scarcely regained his seat before the American and his party hurriedly took their leave, before Mademoiselle la dansense, with her arm through her companion's, moved to the bar, and the man amateurishing the two ladies was clamoring for his bill. My friend summoned the cellar man.

"The wine is becoming too cold," he said. "Please remove it from the pail."

The man obeyed and placed the bottle upon the table. Afterward I know that this must have been a signal, for the scene that followed, notwithstanding its magnificent organization, its swiftness, its unexpectedness, its meticulous pandemonium, Monsieur Desrolles stepped behind my chair, threw his unneeded pince-nez upon the table, and cast a slightly nervous glance up and down the room. The four men who had been lunching alone, and the two others from a distant corner, sprang to their feet. Outside the newcomers who had been watching the aviary closed around the door and, before I could realize it, the whole company had encircled the table of Madame.

Two men had gripped the shoulders of the amazed Jean Marseille, two the secretary, two the visitor from Paris and, even before their knives and forks had fallen clattering upon their plates, even before the cry had altogether escaped from the startled lips of any one of them, there were handcuffs upon their wrists.

Madame's Myrmidons

BUT, if these men, her myrmidons, had seemed to become easy prey to the officers of the law with whom the room appeared unexpectedly to swarm, it was otherwise with Madame. She had risen at the first alarm, and she seemed veritably to swell in her place as she stood there facing battle for her liberty. She kicked the chair away from behind her, her huge, muscular arms suddenly freed themselves, as though by some supernatural effort, from the unnatural constraint of her tight gown. The first man who had laid hands upon her lay senseless upon the floor.

With a sudden dive she seized hold of the other and, gripping him in her arms to shield herself from the bullets that threatened, she dashed down the room, to the amazement of the scattering company, only to find herself face to face at the door with the guard Monsieur Desrolles had posted there.

For the first time she must have realized that the game was up. What followed we are hedged together, in our frantic minds. She held out the struggling man she had been carrying to shelter her from the threatened attack, and then, bending one knee, she shot flung him straight in the face of the nearest of her antagonists. He fell upon the path and lay there unconscious. There was something terrifying in the sight of the man who, with his disguise abandoned, and with his feminine drapery hanging around him in rags, stood dauntlessly facing certain death or capture. Not even the displaced flaxen wig, the paltry complexion, the shreds of his undignified masquerade, could make him ridiculous.

One great arm swung out and laid low a man who had foolishly approached within reach. He stood there, counting the chances against him, and finding them overwhelming. The hard moment his right hand had momentarily disappeared, the sunlight flashed no longer upon the diamonds that upon some thing more sinister gripped in his fingers. He collapsed among them all, but the hand that had rid the world of her most notorious criminal had been his own.

Restaurant Closed

FOR over a week the restaurant was closed.

On the day before its reopening I found it still under surveillance, but there was access to the bar, and Louis was hovering around the grounds. He greeted me warmly, and the change in his appearance was marvelous.

"You're looking better, Louis," I remarked.

"Monsieur will admit that the situation for me was terrible," he pleaded, "and the curious part of it is that I, who was so much the subject of her pretended whims, never had the least idea but that she was indeed a woman. She imposed upon everyone, and she made a fool of me to keep up the illusion. There was no other disguise, I suppose," he went on, "that could have consoled the face and figure of Martin Pyne. There were descriptions of him at every police centre, but as a woman—a great, muscular fellow like that! Who would have believed it?"

"I sat opposite to him three times," I acknowledged, "and I never had a moment's suspicion."

"Except for Jean, who was one of them," Louis went on earnestly, "there was not a soul connected with the place who had the slightest suspicion. The man who I told you used to visit her—was herself. The police found in her room a whole wardrobe of masculine attire and, naturally, when there was an explosion on foot, she went as a man. You see, the hotel being in its grounds, no one saw who comes in and out, and Madame as a man had become quite a familiar figure and was accepted as one of her friends. What we are all curious about, Monsieur," Louis concluded after a moment's pause, "is how the police discovered the first clue that led them to the truth. All the time I have been here there had never been a single inquiry concerning the bona fide of either Madame or any member of her entourage."

The fifty thousand francs was already in my pocket, but I hesitated about letting Louis know the truth. It seemed strange that a representative of the secretary's closing platitude which should have brought to justice one of the greatest of international criminals, so I kept my secret.

Fourth Degree

A Man and His Wife and a Letter

By JACK LAIT

HAPPY, twice blessed, is the man who has a wife and a friend. And Curt Cooley had both.

His wife, Harriet, he loved devotedly, ardently, proudly.

His friend, Major Zeno Hillyer, he loved with that affection between men which is enhanced by trust, admiration and understanding.

They had been buddies on the other side. Cooley, a brilliant young lawyer, had returned to his practice, and shortly after the things married the desirable Harriet Townson. Hillyer, a soldier by calling, had remained in the regular army, and was still a bachelor.

A smart, clicking pleiura was Major Hillyer, as are most of our West Point men, until long after most of us at their ages are shuffling, slouching, unromantic figures. Hillyer was still in his thirties, handsome, cultured, heroic and romantic. Any woman might have lost her head over him, and many had.

Cooley was no bad bargain himself. Highly successful and influential, of splendid appearance, finely educated, here was a man to win and to hold the heart of almost any woman.

The major dined frequently with the Cooleys, and Harriet, from the first, evidenced enjoyment in his company, which highly pleased her husband. The Cooleys did little broader entertaining, being home-loving and quietly disposed. Cooley had many engagements, besides, through his professional and political contacts, and was in luck if he could spend three evenings a week in the serenity of his pretty home with his wife and, perhaps, his crony.

It was not unusual for the Major to keep Harriet from solitude on occasions when Cooley remained out or had to leave early. This was, of course, with the knowledge and consent of her husband.

No suspicion had ever entered his head that there could be more than honorable, pleasant friendship between the two of whom he was most fond. Nor would there ever have been such a thought born, most likely, had not Mrs. Cooley discharged one of her maids.

As it was, Cooley opened his mail downtown one day and read the following, scrawled in pencil:

Mr Cooley if you knew what goings-on when you aint home between your wife and the major youd throw her out in the street. Open your eyes and do some spying for yourself and youll find out a plenty. One who knows.

Cooley reeled. Hot flushes flew to his face. This was—oh, it was impossible—preposterous!

He had every man's contempt for anonymous letter writers. And this one was obviously malicious. From the chirography, spelling and style he knew it must be the work of a woman, a woman of the lower risen. The discharged servant flashed to his mind. That was it!

He tried to remember exactly how she looked. Yes—angular, sallow, a mean expression. Not a person to be trusted at all. But suppose what she wrote had some basis of truth! Oh, of course, it couldn't be serious—but—hm—no such thought had ever clouded his mind . . . spying! . . . she suggested some spying. Oh, it was unthinkable. He spy on Harriet? And the major? Ugh!

He loosed the letter on his desk. But a few moments later he reached for it and read it again.

"Goings-on"—that word has a nasty ring. Had it said "Liaison" he would have laughed, but "goings-on——"

He shook his head.

He tried to toss the matter out of his mind and get into some immediate and important matters. But he couldn't concentrate. Thoughts kept flitting through his brain. Pictures, too. Now, how had Harriet looked last time the three of them had been together? Had she been more attentive to Hillyer than was proper? He couldn't definitely decide now. Having never had a doubt, he had never watched with any such idea.

Could it be?

Could they be so thankless, so heartless, so conscienceless as to betray him, who had never been faithless in deed or thought to either?

Surely the opportunities had been unusual. Such affairs came to light every day. Every man upon whose unsuspecting head such a blow falls naturally wonders how it could have come about in his case. Everyone knows such things go on all the time, but everyone says, "It couldn't happen to me."

There had surely been no observable change in Harriet's manner and attitude toward him. She was a light-hearted girl, but intense in love, and if she had lost her affection for him it was incredible that she would not have manifested it. No, her words had shown no metamorphosis.

And Hillyer? He had at no time turned away his face when Cooley smiled at him as he accepted the warm hospitality of his friend's home. They had chatted, the three of them, for several hours only a couple of evenings back, and Cooley could now revisualize the major—what he said and how he said it, how he looked and acted. He had not let slip any surreptitious or self-conscious glances at Harriet, nor had he dropped his eyes when they met her husband's.

Cooley prided himself on his shrewdness. He was a noted cross-examiner and credited with steel-trap perceptiveness. When, as a young lawyer, he had been assistant prosecutor, they nicknamed him "Fourth Degree," meaning that when he went at a witness he didn't stop at the third. He was a student of facial expressions and prided himself he could read as much from eyes as from lips.

An hour after he had read that miserable note he was satisfied he could not dismiss it. So he put on his hat, called a taxi and hurried home, a prosecutor unique to Cooley, in the morning hours. Harriet was at home. She was flabbergasted to see him, and expressed alarm over his health.

He dismissed her fears about his health, beckoned her to sit, lit a cigarette and came straight to the point. He was not a man to insult his wife and his friend by doing any spying, as the letter advised. He hated himself because he couldn't ignore the whole mess. But he had discovered that he couldn't—it must be settled, and conclusively, without delay.

He did not show Harriet the letter; that was unnecessary. But he said:

"Prepare yourself for a bit of unpleasant discussion . . . I got an anonymous letter this morning charging 'goings-on' between you and Hillyer, and——"

Harriet slowly arose, then knelt on her chair, supporting her arms on its back, and smiled down into her husband's drawn face.

"It was Ella," she said. "I fired her because she lied to me. Cora told me that as Ella walked out she swore she'd make trouble for me. I'm surprised at you."

"Yes, yes—I know all that. Her motive is the basest and her credibility worthless. I have not tried to find her and ask for details. I have not tried to trick you or trap you into anything. I am not accusing you by any means. I am just informing you that in the mail this morning I got such a letter."

"Thanks," said Harriet. "I would do as much for you if I received one. Of course, I wouldn't believe a word of it—any more than you believe any implications in yours."

"I believe nothing. My experience has taught me to trust blindly or trust nobody. I believe proof, not accusations. Now—tell me the truth, Harriet—I will believe you. I shall not seek proof either way. This is the most critical hour of my whole life. Now, tell me exactly why an unimaginative, stupid housemaid, granting she sought maliciously and willfully and wickedly to pay off a grudge, should select that particular subject matter."

Harriet did not lose her smile though it did lose some of its luster and power.

"I—I suppose it was because she saw me and the major together a great deal—here—often when you were absent—you know that well enough——"

"Yes. But what did she see that she should suggest my opening my eyes and spying?"

"I haven't the slightest notion. When she couldn't have seen anything that even a foul-minded vixen like Ella could have construed into anything wrong, how can I tell you what she saw that could suggest such an outrageous and unspeakable letter?"

"I expected you to say that. I wanted you to say that. But, without your assurance, I couldn't rest and couldn't think, despite the character of the charges. It would have been the same had the letter laid a murder at your hands. I hope you understand thoroughly in what spirit I dropped everything else and rushed home to you."

"Certainly, dear. If I didn't, I'd be in tears by now—or in tantrums. This is no breezy drawing-room topic for conversation, darling. I realize how sickening such a communication could be—out of nowhere sowing a seed of potent weed where nothing but lovely flowers have lived so long. If a brick is thrown at you and stuns you, you can't laugh it off because it was thrown by a ruffian or by an unseen hand."

"Exactly. But this gave me an insight on myself that I could never have had otherwise—I hope. I thought I knew Curt Cooley rather well. But I learned a lot about him in the last hour or so—that was fresh if not refreshing. I discovered that I have a streak of savage in me."

"What do you mean?"

"While I never doubted you, the mental suggestion in that note led me to thinking what would happen if such a thing could really be true. Now, you would say, knowing me as you must, that if such a calamity came to me I would wring my hands, lift my cross and walk out a heart-shattered man. That's what I would have said, myself."

"I never considered such a contingency. But, since you did, what did you conclude you would do?"

"I discovered that my impulse would be to confront you and choke the truth out of you, and then give you a beating that would probably cripple you for life. As for the man—I'd kill him!"

The smile came off Harriet's face . . . then she broke into an audible laugh.

"So—you'd break my bones and shoot my lover! I'm mighty glad I didn't confess."

"That isn't all. After that, I'd kill myself. You'd never see me on trial, bearing my soul and pleading the unwritten law. I don't know why it came to me to only beat you, instead of killing you, too. I didn't plan or plot it. That's exactly how my hitherto fastidious guided me, however. Stranger, isn't it?"

"Rather grisly, I should say. I don't know which fate I'd prefer—a black and blue widow in a hospital or the fair victim of a jealous husband's transform in a silk-lined casket.

Phew! . . . Ella certainly started something in the Cooley menage!

"I even had my speeches all set—they, too, leaped forth spontaneously. 'So you I was going to say—

'You aren't fit to live, but I'll let you—I'll let you live to suffer to remember, to repent—'

'Not to repent?'

'Never thought of that! But, to continue—But the man who violated my home and besmirched my name, he must pay the price with his life, and, by heavens he will!'

'Wai this to be after the beating, or a prologue—or sound accompaniment during the action shots?'

'Let me see—let me think back—ah, yes, I have it now—it was to precede the beating, while I had my hands around your throat——'

'Choking the truth out fit me?'

'And then I was to slap you first with my open hand. This was to register contempt before I went into the more emotional manifestations.

'Then odd were to double your fist and strike me—just where, first?'

'The face, I suppose'

'Oh, Curt—could you strike the beautiful pan that you kissed so often and so sweetly?'

'Sure. Under such provocation. Again and again I was to have struck it—hard, unrelenting blows——'

'Were you to kick me, too?'

'No. I didn't think of that—I never had the hunch to use my feet at all. Aren't the minds of men amazingly constructed?'

'Nothing human is perfect, Curt. If you forget your feet, consider that you remembered so many other little details. How were you going to kill my—h'm—him?'

'With a knife. No nice, clean bullet wound—and out! With a knife. I was to stab him many times.'

'As many times as you struck me? Or more? Or less?'

'More. Until my arm gave out.'

'Then were you to turn the reeking, crimson blade on yourself?'

'No. I was to shoot myself—through the temple.'

'Selfish to the end. Always taking the best of it.'

'Well, I was entitled to the best of it. I hadn't done anything. It was you two——'

'You had already beaten and choked me and murdered a man with a knife and stabbed him until you couldn't raise your hand—ah, you were going to shoot yourself with your left hand, then?'

Cooley burst into a laugh.

'Sar—you're better on the fourth degree than I am.' he exclaimed. 'You've got me up a blind alley. I never thought of that one.'

She put her arms around his neck and kissed him. He strained her to him and held her long and strong, then tenderly. There were tears in his eyes.

"You you'll forgive me, honey, won't you?" he whispered.

"Absolute! I'm truly glad it happened, even though it did give you a couple of bad and otherwise wasted hours. I learned a whole lot about you, too, that I never imagined before. Oh, boy, but you're a bad baby to fool. I don't want any of it. You can depend on me from now on."

"I will," he answered. "But I'm going to practice shooting myself with my left hand!"

"Oh, Curt, could you strike the beautiful pan that you kissed so often and so sweetly?"

Count Bethlen—The Strong Man of Hungary

By T. J. C. MARTYN

ANOTHER year has sped and still Count Stephen Bethlen is Prime Minister of Hungary. Recently he began his ninth year of office—a term that is not exceeded by any other first minister in the world. In this period no fewer than twelve French cabinets have fallen and there is today not a minister in Europe that was not in power when Admiral summoned Count Bethlen for the last time to take the reins of Government in his hands. And yet the suave, inscrutable Hungarian Premier is as firmly in the saddle as ever he was.

Count Bethlen is and has been something more than a Prime Minister. When he took over his stewardship of the Hungarian Government at the behest of Admiral Horthy, Hungary was on the verge of disruption. In the first four years of his Premiership he restored the country to something like normal, in the last four years he has not merely consolidated his position, but has raised it to an unrivaled pre-eminence in Southeastern Europe. Thus, in a very real way Count Bethlen is the founder of modern Hungary.

His triumph is one over great odds. When the ship of state is foundering on the rocks of financial economic and political destitution, it takes a genius to make the best of a bad situation, but it takes a superman to get the ship off the rocks and sail it again in fair weather and in fool. This is precisely what Count Bethlen has done and, surprising though it may seem, he has done it almost single-handed.

To understand Bethlen the one must go back into history and afterward learn something of Bethlen the boy and Bethlen at the outset of his career for the Prime Minister of the Magyars has inherited many of his salient characteristics from his ancestors, and his career—if he ever thought of it in that light—was at its outset unpromising and doomed to mediocrity.

The family of Bethlen de Bethlen. His full surname is almost as old as Hungary. Several Bethlens were referred to as early as the twelfth century as "comes," and it seems certain that the family has gained distinction in the early part of the Arpad dynasty, which was the first of the Hungarian dynasties. Count Gregory Bethlen accompanied Emperor Sigismund of Germany on his travels, and later, in 1453, a Count Francis achieves fame as a parliamentarian and jurist while another Bethlen, Count John, becomes Chancellor of Hungary. Another Count Gregory leads the honveds in the revolution of 1848 and later after the failure of the revolution joins to Russian intervention he becomes a general in the first Italian Regiment of Hussars in the service of King Victor Emmanuel II.

Although the Bethlen family was originally Hungarian since 1526 when John Zapolya declared himself independent by playing off the Hapsburg Emperor against the Sultan of Turkey, it has primarily been identified with the fortunes and misfortunes of Transylvania. It has no genealogical connection with the Bethlen family, one of whose scions became for a brief time King of Hungary during the Thirty Years' War. As a Transylvanian family it was frequently in opposition to the Hapsburgs and to the Ottomans and in opposition the Bethlens proved themselves awkward customers.

Count Stephen Bethlen was born fifty-six years ago in Gyerekeszeg (now Cornesti), Transylvania. His father and mother died when he was seven and he was brought up by a family council the head of which was the father of the present Count Khuen-Hedervary, chief of the Hungary Foreign Office. As a Calvinist he was brought up in spartan simplicity, although there was at that time plenty of money in the family coffers. He learned to speak and write, besides his native tongue, English, French, German, Rumanian and Italian. He was very much of a bookworm and scarcely developed not only the latent possibilities of his own land but of foreign countries as well. His chief recreations were riding and fencing of which recreations he is still an ardent follower. In early manhood he turned to the study of agriculture. In 1901 he married a distant cousin, Countess Ilona Bethlen and his studies finished, embarked on his political career.

Count Bethlen attracted nobody in his early political days. A short unprepossessing individual lacking in all forensic art, he seems to have cut a sorry figure in Parliament, especially a Parliament dominated by such a forceful figure as Count Tisza and occasionally thrilled by the oratory of the now veteran Count Apponyi. When he did speak, however his quiet, self-assured demeanor and his easy marshalling of facts and figures won him a respectful audience. But for twelve years he was hardly known. Then came the war. Count Tisza offered him a portfolio in his cabinet, Bethlen refused and his name which had been momentarily on men's lips, was dropped and Bethlen himself slid back into obscurity until the revolution.

From now on his personal history is better known. He worked assiduously in overthrowing the Red regime of Bela Kun, representing the White Government in Vienna. When that regime was overthrown in 1919 the only strong man on the horizon was Admiral Horthy. Bethlen had been buried in the reactionary swamp he which followed and he was not heard of for almost two years. Admiral Horthy, elected Governor of Hungary, had naturally been brought into close contact with Count Bethlen and from earliest times had held a high opinion of him. As early as 1920 the Governor called upon him to form a Government, but Bethlen was unable to do so, and this was brought upon sparsan simplicity, although there was at that time plenty of money in the family coffers. He learned to speak and write, besides his native tongue English, French, German, Rumanian and Italian. He was very much of a bookworm and scarcely developed not only the latent possibilities of his own land but of foreign countries as well. His chief recreations were riding and fencing of which recreations he is still an ardent follower. In early manhood he Clean Bowled!

The veteran Dr Talbot, formerly Bishop of Winchester, who recently celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday, has always been a great lover of cricket, a game which he continued to play long after being raised to a bishopric. He has been some of humor and wit. During one cricket match the bowling was so wide that Dr Talbot appealed to the bowler "to keep the ball in the discord. The laugh was against the bishop, however, when the next ball went his middle stump flying, and the bowler said, "I think, my lord, that was well inside the parish."

"Suburban gardens during the Summer season are merely repetitions of each other," says a writer.

The gardens in my neighborhood (No doubt, you wonder why they should)

All look alike to me

All have a lawn—a border bright—

Two rose trees—pansies, violet, white

The "lay-out" all agree

Each garden gets the same old rain,

Then, when the weeds roll by again,

They share the same sunshine,

And all my neighbors—they're no fools!—

Do gardening with the self-same tools.

Pope Pius XI Has Lived Close to the Hearts of His People

NOW, as never before, the eyes of the world are turned toward Rome to see the Pope leaving the Vatican, so ending what was called the voluntary captivity of Popes after having lost the temporal power on September 20, 1870.

In these days it has often been repeated that it required a great Pope to cut the gordian knot of a great quarrel. And Pope Pius XI is a great Pope indeed. No other Pope, before ascending the apostolic chair, was so well known as Achille Ratti.

Pope Pius XI

He was born in Desio, a small village of Lombardy, on May 31, 1857. He was ordained priest in Rome on December 26, 1879, and staight sacred vocation in the seminary of Milan from 1882 to 1887; then he was appointed doctor of the Ambrosian Library of Milan, one of the most important in Italy, where he remained until 1907.

He was the first Pope to bless the crowd gathered in St. Peter's Square from the window of the Vatican; it was the first contact with people outside the church.

In his first encyclical, Ubi Arcano Dei, he repeated the protest of his predecessors against the Italian Government, as against the jail warden of papacy. He said: "To defend our rights and our apostolic dignity we protest, as we have always done, against such a state of affairs. And we do so, not for the sake of earthly ambition, of which we would be ashamed, but for a mere debt of conscience."

On February 11, 1929 his Secretary of State, Cardinal Gasparri, signed with Mussolini, the Lateran Treaty, which marks the beginning of a period of co-operation between church and state in Italy. With such a treaty the Holy See abandoned many old positions, and most important of all it recognised Rome as the capital of Italy, so releasing its Pontiffs perpetual claims on the city. Knowing life and men he feels that the time has come when popes must bring into the streets of the world the warmth of their faith.

"More on There, Lady," Showman Bawled at Her Excellency

AND now it can be told, as a certain writer claiming intimacy with vice-regal affairs of state, has said

In frequent visits to Toronto since Lord Willingdon and his charming sister were welcomed at Rideau Hall, local citizens have granted the opportunity of coming in contact with the personality and democratic spirit for which the Governor General and Lady Willingdon are justly celebrated. No better example of these traits has been given than that surrounding an incident during the visit of the Viceregal party to the Canadian National Exhibition last September.

According to the story told by witnesses, Lady Willingdon was being escorted through the Women's Building. As she was descending a stairway in advance of her escort, her attention was attracted by the ballyhoo of a showman demonstrating an "unbreakable comb in a stall at the foot of the stairway.

Armed with pliers and a hammer, he twisted and pounded the comb, ranged before him. Inspired by the sight of the Viceroy's party he frenziedly attacked his wares and loudly proclaimed their virtues.

Momentarily fascinated by the extraordinary performance, Lady Willingdon stood stock-still on a lively step. Her escort waited behind her. The entire placemen was blocked. Mounting exasperation on the part of the showman gave way.

"Move on there, lady, can't ye see yer blocking the traffic?"

An outraged gasp came from the escort. Surprise, doubt and finally amusement flickered over the face of Her Excellency. She moved

Churchill Received Its Name in 1686

CHURCHILL, the terminus of the Hudson Bay Railway at the mouth of Churchill River, first appears on a map in the collection of the Geographic Board of Canada as "Port de Marek." The map is that of the French mapmaker Sanson, published in 1860. The reference is to Jens Munk, the Danish naval officer who wintered there in 1619-20 with the loss of all the members of his crew except himself and three others. The tragedy so impressed the natives that they called the river Manoteou sibi, or Strangers River. Hence also the name Danish River used during the French regime on Hudson Bay. Both names are mentioned by the Canadian Jesuits, who resided twenty years on the bay and published an account of it in 1720. Seven years before Munk landed at Churchill, the Prince Rupert Bution had sailed down the coast and Captain Luke Foxe's map of 1635 applies one of Button's names, "Houbart's Hope" to Churchill Bay. The island at Button name of the river is Missinipi or Big River, a name that is found in the York Factory journal for 1714. The river received another name in 1776, when Joseph Frostober from Montreal reached the upper waters and intercepted Indians bound with furs for the "English" post (Churchill) on the bay and called it English River.

The application of the name Churchill is due to the Hudson's Bay Company, for when Captain John Abrahamson established a post in 1686, naming post and river after John, Lord Churchill, afterwards Duke of Marlborough, who had been elected governor of the company in the previous year. The post was destroyed by fire about 1690, and because of wars with France which lasted until 1713, Churchill was not visited again by the company until 1717, when Governor Knight proceeded to it from Albany and chose a sight for a new post—Natural Resources.

General Sir A. Currie Is Never Taken "Aback"

A RATHER striking characteristic of General Sir Arthur Currie, G.C.M.G., former commander of the Canadian corps and principal of McGill University, Montreal, that has received little or no attention is his peculiar mental alertness—his freedom from absence of mind, no matter how busy. In a very marked degree he is "all there" and because of this—because of his quick and accurate answers to questions flashed at him—he has proved a godsend to newspaper reporters.

For example, supposing a sleuth of the press, having learned that a distinguished military man from overseas is visiting Montreal, wants to get in touch for an interview he is likely to get into communication with Sir Arthur Currie as a starting point. He will addressed to Sir Arthur without fuss or difficulty, and at once and well aware. "Will General Bradford be staying with you while he is in Montreal?"

"No," Sir Arthur will reply, "he will be the guest of Colonel J. S. Dennis at 14 Richelieu Pt. his phone number is Westmount 0000."

An answer such as this will be given instanter, much to the joy of the hustling reporter, who appreciates all efforts of results. And it will be given pleasantly. No fumbling, no beating round the bush, no humming and hawing.

This almost divine faculty—no doubt a military quality, highly developed—is shown in the memory under perfect control—phone forth with unusual splendor during the peak of Sir Arthur's activities, that is during the five or six battle years following the peace when Sir Arthur was in increased demand as chief speaker at military anniversary dinners, at the unveiling of statues and memorial tablets and in fact on all those numerous patriotic occasions, including even those of women's and boys' clubs, when his help would naturally be sought. And somehow Sir Arthur always managed to say something new and splendid on each occasion, even when the occasion was comparatively unimportant.

In such a whirl of events an ordinary man would have become distracted and crazy but Sir Arthur not only "kept his head" but was always courteous and helpful to others even when badly pressed for time such as when caught "between jumps," hurrying from train to auto.

As principal of McGill, Sir Arthur has shed a new lustre over that already illustrious institution. At the last convocation he delivered the dignified peal in question, one heard frequent remarks in Montreal and elsewhere concerning the "realism" that was responsible for the position. In fact straight-thinking people began to think it became just a little weary of the repetition of the same old platitudes and explanations. Of course it was not long before even the most narrow-gauged critics began to realise that Sir Arthur was the right head and a voice that carries a long distance with the Dominion Government. Although Sir Arthur himself never subscribed to the platitudes, there are many who say that he brought more to McGill than McGill brought to him.

Socialist to Keep Britain's Purse

By GRATTAN O'LEARY

IF is said that but a bicycle accident relief of the Exchequer, might still be a Philip Snowden, Britain's Socialist Chancellorship civil servant. The chance was the literature that he read while lying as an invalid that turned him into a Socialist and induced him to retire from the civil service, in which he had toiled for seven years. At that time he was twenty-seven years old. He was born of poor parents—his father was a weaver at Cowling, near Keighley—and the young man had a great deal of the obduracy associated with natives of the Yorkshire country. Cowling is a village, a small, thriving, manufacturing one, and there are many like it round about the moorlands; and the tradition is that from all of them spoke characters of a real, dour type, and something of Philip Snowden's musical, high-pitched voice, and with Snowden facial features and bulldog resolution.

Yorkshiremen, according to this belief, have no use for half measures in anything. They are realists. They believe in knowing what they want, going the shortest way to get it; knowing what they think, saying it in the fewest possible words. They live a stern life in a stern country, and Philip Snowden is said to be like them all—a product of native climate and the social environment of his native place.

Some of Snowden's critics have regarded him as a romantic. When he first took office in 1924 they expected him to show more of romance than practicability in his budget. But they were wrong. Snowden, it is said, had been thirty-six years preparing himself for that budget. Far from having his head in the clouds he delivered a statement which brought him eulogy from the Conservatives and in his name enrolled among the Fellows of the Royal Statistical Society.

Yet Snowden is essentially the crusader. There is a red-hot passion in his speeches when he is fighting the cause of the poorer brethren; while for centuries the Church has revelled in his superior when he goes in for that sort of thing. He has been called sour, bitter, acrid. Yet Snowden's head is clear to stop short at the arts of attack. He wants to do things, not merely to denounce things. He is reputed to have said that he never hoped to live to see a Labor Government in office; but once there he was determined so to frame his budget that it might give them a chance of coming back not alone to office but to actual power. So he produced a budget that few Liberals could criticize.

Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in Great Britain.

The truth is that Snowden is subtle as well as forcible, a political tactician as well as a determined "constitutional revolutionary." His face is as stern. It is thin, pinched with long years of suffering, and he has to lean about on sticks, and to get up and sit down in anything resembling comfort in the House is a fearful strain on him, making him sometimes impatient, irritated, even snappy. But he knows the value of amiability as well, and at times has a fine sense of humor.

When Snowden got over his bicycle accident he went into Keighley and tried to turn that Liberal stronghold over to Socialism. He failed. He then up the task as hopeless and went over the border to Blackburn. Tories and Liberals alike laughed at the shrunken young man with his weird ascetic and lined face who thought he could win Blackburn.

But in 1900 he polled a record Socialist vote and at every poll in which he spoke he was a minor god. The Socialists regarded him as something more than human. For twenty years not even a Liberal had ventured to contest the Blackburn Tory stronghold. He was filled with by his opponents. Some of his enemies invented a fable that he was dismissed from the racing scene said he was an Atheist, but he proudly declined to reply to personalities and kept his speeches on such a high plane that his meetings were revivalist in quality.

The Blackburn factory hands came to love him. He was called "The Saint," and his pretty and clever blonde wife even yet has the corresponding name of "Archangel." The factory hands went straight from the weaving sheds to his halls. They sat hypnotized by an eloquence that was a revelation to them. In 1906 Snowden was elected and held Blackburn throughout until 1918.

All through the war, however, he had been uncompromisingly pacifist, and that lost him the seat. But such a large and commanding mind could not be kept out of Parliament, and Snowden returned in 1922—this time for Colne Valley.

His career since then is contemporary history. His budget of 1923—the first Labor budget that Britain had known—was masterly for its lucidity, praised by Lord Oxford and Lord Balfour.

Today, back once more as Chancellor of the Exchequer, supervisor of Britain's purse, wearing the mantle that was once worn by Gladstone, Goschen, Mr. Asquith and Rich-Beach, he is one of the Empire's great figures. It is a long long way from a humble Yorkshire cottage.

Crippled Girl Carved War Animals for Memorial

ONE of the most remarkable of national war memorials is the Scottish War Memorial built within the walls of Edinburgh Castle and incorporating historic stone walls in its memorial chapel. There was an uproar at the suggestion to change the skyline of the castle even with a memorial to a hundred thousand war dead, but the project has been achieved.

The work is almost entirely the achievement of a group of Edinburgh artists who pooled their efforts and worked together like some old guild of craftsmen. One of the artists was a young crippled girl. Miss Phyllis Bone whose remarkable sculpture of animals had already made her notable in Scotland. To her was assigned the carving of memorials to all animals who had served in the war, the quaint gargoyles which here and there jut from the walls and the lion and the unicorn which flank the main entrance. Miss Bone threw all of her enthusiasm, her skill and her Scottish fervor into the task. The mute creatures who had helped win the war depended upon her for adequate recognition. Places were made in circular medallions and on them she carved the heads of horses, camels, mules, reindeer, dogs, oxen, elephants, carrier pigeons, and on one plaque, she carved canaries and white mice. Even these tiny creatures helped in the winning of the war and were known as "The Dumb Friends." The inscription in commemoration of the animals also reads in "Remember also the humble beasts that served and died."

Not Too Strong for the Irish So Speaker Gave Thanks

MRS Victoria Booth-Clibborn Demarest, the famous evangelist, who conducted such a successful campaign in Canada two years ago, will always remember that Basil Sir Marie, Ontario, has a good many Irish people in it and that most of them go to church, once in a while anyway.

At one of these services Mrs. Demarest had been telling of some of her experiences in France, the country of her birth. She said that she was very proud of being French, that she liked the French people and that it always gave her a great deal of pleasure to meet any of that nationality who might be living in the towns she visited. "She had heard," she went on, "that there were a great many French people in Sault Ste Marie. Perhaps there were some at the meeting. If so would they stand so that she might see who they were?"

About a dozen of the congregation rose to their feet.

"The Lord be praised!" said Mrs. Demarest. "Would those who are from Ireland or who are of Irish descent, please stand?" requested the minister.

Nearly half the immense congregation rose in a body.

"The Lord be praised!" said the pastor.

Byng Raises Police Morale

VISCOUNT Byng appointed Commissioner of the London Metropolitan Police last year to reform police methods has issued his annual report, which shows police offences actually upon a smaller scale in the last twelve months than for the previous year.

Punishment for neglect of duty was meted out in only 455 cases, compared with 580 in 1927 and 623 in 1926.

How high the standard of efficiency has been is shown by the fact that that year not a single murderer—of whom there were only twenty-four in the London metropolitan area, comprising 7,750,000 people—escaped detection.

Referring to the charges upon the London police of the public criticism to which they have been subjected, Lord Byng says: "There is good reason to believe that the constable's confidence in the public and in himself was for a time slightly shaken and that the efficiency of the force suffered in consequence.

Taking into consideration the number of police officers involved and the large variety of circumstances which arise I am impressed by the rarity of cases in which frivolous or malicious charges have been brought by the police."

Lord Byng also deals with this current suppositions that unnecessary prosecutions are liable to be encouraged by the promotion system in operation in the metropolitan force.

"It is often suggested," he said, "that an officer's prospects of promotion depend upon the number of charges he initiates. This is a fallacy. Officers are selected for promotion on general considerations of their character and ability and attention to duty, which cannot be gauged by any such arbitrary standard.

Turning to some offences that the police are concerned with prevailing, he says: Prosecutions for drunkenness showed a substantial decrease, the total figure of 26,667 being 4,088 less than for 1927 and 8,863 less than for 1926.

The strength of the Metropolitan Police force is now 19,781. The women's branch comprises two inspectors, five sergeants and forty-three constables.

"Why's that?"

"He always says, 'Just one marriage and then we'll part.'"

New Head of "The Army" Knows His Present Job Well

EDWARD John Higgins, the new General of the Salvation Army, was converted to the cause and he now leads through listening in the "Mother of the Army" at Reading England. Until that time he had been prejudiced against the Salvationists and in partnership with his father was pursuing a flourishing business career. It is worthy of note that his father was then over to the Army at the same time, and both were given positions of responsibility. The son became a member of the Army's training staff. Since then—that was forty-six years ago—Edward John Higgins has filled almost every strategic position in the Army, so that when a successor to General Booth was considered he loomed large as a candidate and was elected. In addition to his intimate knowledge of Army affairs in Great Britain, General Higgins has had opportunities to work for the organization in many foreign fields. When the crisis in the affairs of the Army in the United States came some years ago he became chief secretary to Commissioner and Mrs. Booth Tucker, who were in charge of affairs in America, and in this position was able to move close to the Army's big problems on this side of the Atlantic Ocean.

Following that experience, he became British commissioner and assistant foreign secretary. These appointments put him in touch with the principal problems of the Army in Great Britain, Europe Asia, Africa and the British Dominions. He had come to know the Army intimately. He knew every important officer, was solving daily a variety of problems of administration and had his hand on the financial controls. All this work was crowned in 1907 with the invaluable experience of an extended tour with the Army's founder. He travelled with the old General through Canada and on into the Far East. So, when Commissioner Howard retired from the position of chief of the staff Bramwell Booth appointed Commissioner Higgins to the vacant position.

When the Great War came, the speedy organization of the Salvation Army War Services was directed by Commissioner Higgins. In England his wife organized the Home League of the Army which took care of the women and children of men at the front. And since the war Mrs. Higgins has conducted "The Pilgrimage of Remembrance" which has for its object the assisting of relatives to visit the graves of their dead.

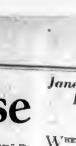
The new head of the Army therefore has been thoroughly trained for his great tasks. And the Army will feel the impact of his personality at home and abroad. The General Higgins is a man who is up and doing.

He is a hard worker, and plans all his activities so as to get the most out of each day. As may be imagined, he is besieged by callers from morning till night, but he manages to see everybody who ought to be seen and he has the reputation of being very courteous. His big task is lightened, to some extent, by his ability to secure the generous co-operation of his subordinates. He has worked with them so long in so many fields, and in so many different jobs, big and little, that he knows how to get the best out of his fellow labourers.

Janey Canuck to Holidays in Our Backyard

WHEN the rest of the world goes, Mrs. Sinclair (Janey Canuck), famous author, and public magistrate of Edmonton, will enjoy her own backyard.

In a small area fenced off in her garden, which has been planted with and white cherry, has set up a Palm Beach umbrella, tastefully scrolled in the colors of Joseph Hare, too, grow flowers, great clumps of sunshine in the pride of her heart. When her offices are over it is in this pleasant spot that Irvie Murphy proposes to spend her time this Summer.



Mrs. Emily Murphy

The sunflowers have a history that dates on the occasion of her marriage. Murphy's father brought some seeds and a few young fruit trees from garden of her father, the Hon. Ogle Gowan, of Toronto, to the Ferguson of Cookstown, Ontario, where she planted. There all her children were born.

The sunflowers in Mrs. Murphy's today are the offspring of the old Gowan Ferguson gardens in Ontario, and in northerly Alberta home they seem to developed a finer luxuriance and a bright than in the East.

Mrs. Murphy believes that it is possible take a most satisfactory holiday in country. Under her Palm Beach umbrella expects to get all the benefit of sun and fresh air without the more fatiguing pleasures of travel, she declares.

So she will not attend the convention the Authors and Canadian Women's Club in Nova Scotia next month but will go to the full the novelty of holidaying in own back garden.

Knew Peter Simple But Not Marriott, M.P., of Yorkshire

SIR Arthur Marriott, M.P., a Yorkshire member of the party of British parliamentarians who toured Canada last Summer, is averse to being interviewed. But there was occasion on the trip when he not only consented to an interview, but insisted on one being granted in Regina, Saskatchewan.

Sir Arthur had been pointed out to a newspaper fluttered reporter as one of the outstanding members of the party (the reporter approached the rather unapproachable Marriott).

"I believe your name is Marriott, sir? I am present one of the newspapers here and would like to get an interview with you."

The subject growled fiercely. "Why do you want to interview me? I don't believe that you even know what I do, do you?"

That was a stumper, for the reporter thought members of Parliament spent all their time being members of Parliament. Sir Arthur was accordingly told so.

"Don't you know I write? Haven't you ever heard of Peter Simple? came the reply still in growly tone of voice.

"Books—Marryat—writer?

All at a sudden light broke over the reporter's face. "Why Captain Marryat. I'm delighted to meet you. I've read your 'Midshipman Easy' and 'Peter Simple' myself."

Something like a groan broke from the Englishman. There was a muttered quotation about the narrowness of fame. Then a hearty laugh.

"Where can I find a quiet spot? I want to talk to you." The reporter, more flustered than ever, brightened at this. A quiet corner was found, and Sir Arthur explained how his name was spelled, that the books of parliamentary matters he had written, and a great many other things. When he rose to his feet fifteen minutes later, he said, "Do you realize this is the first interview I've given since I arrived in Canada?"

Yokohama Christians Would Send Gospel to New York Slums

MRS. Archibald M. Huestis, for several years president of the Toronto Local Council of Women, has recently returned from a visit to her daughter at Johnsbury, India. She spent many months in India, toured through Burma and travelled down the historic Irrawaddy, staying for a time in Singapore and observed the marvellous development of the rubber plantations in the country of the Malay States. She also visited the Philippines, Tokyo on the Empress of France.

Her best story, she says, is for those who like to hear how Christianity is spreading from its fields in funds for the dissemination of missionary activity. She picked it up from fellow passengers on the Empress, people who attended divine service in Yokohama at the Anglican church.

The Bishop of Japan presided at this service and made a special appeal for funds. It appeared that in the slums of a great city there were many unfortunate families, Japanese and non-Christians, to whom Christian mercies and charities for the Christians of Japan so minister.

The money was for work among the poor of New York!

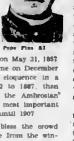
Probing Barred

A topical story is going the rounds concerning a witty retort made by the late Chancellor of the Exchequer. The subject under discussion was the income tax returns, and the methods of the collectors. "After all," objected one of the company, "the majority of taxpayers are honest men—men of probity." "Yes," interjected Mr. Churchill, "so long as you don't probe."

Pope Pius XI Has Lived Close to the Hearts of His People

NOW, as never before, the eyes of the world are turned toward Rome to see the Pope leaving the Vatican, so ending what was called the voluntary captivity of Popes after having lost the temporal power on September 20, 1870.

In these days it has often been repeated that it required a great Pope to cut the gordian knot of a great quarrel. And Pius XI is a great Pope indeed. No other Pope, before ascending the apostolic chair was so well known as Achille Ratti.



Pope Pius XI

He was born in Desio, a small village of Lombardy, on May 31, 1857. He was ordained priest in Rome on December 30, 1879, and taught sacred eloquence in a seminary of Milan from 1882 to 1887, then he was appointed doctor of the Ambrosian Library of Milan, one of the most important in Italy, where he remained until 1907.

He was the first Pope to bless the crowd gathered in St. Peter's Square from the window of the Vatican; it was the first contact with people outside the church.

In his first encyclical, Ubi Arcano Dei, he repeated the protest of his predecessors against the Italian Government, as against the jail warden of papacy. He said: "To defend our rights and our apostolic dignity we protest, as we have always done, against such a state of affairs. And we do so, not for the sake of earthly ambitions, of which we would be ashamed but for a mere dictate of conscience."

He said: "To defend our rights and our apostolic dignity we protest, as we have always done, against such a state of affairs. And we do so, not for the sake of earthly ambitions, of which we would be ashamed but for a mere dictate of conscience."

On February 11, 1929, his Secretary of State, Cardinal Gasparri, signed with Mussolini, the Lateran Treaty, which marks the beginning of a period of co-operation between church and state in Italy. With such a treaty the Holy See abandoned many old positions, and most important of all it recognized Rome as the capital of Italy, so releasing its heretofore persistent claims on the city. Knowing life and men he feels that the time has come when popes must bring into the streets of the world the warmth of their faith.

"Move on There, Lady," Showman Bawled at Her Excellency

AND now it can be told, as a certain writer is claiming intimacy with vital affairs of state, has said.

In frequent visits to Toronto since Lord Willingdon and his charming secret were welcomed at Rideau Hall, local citizens have grasped the opportunity of coming in contact with the personality and democratic spirit for which the Governor General and Lady Willingdon are justly celebrated. No better example of these traits has been given than that surrounding an incident during the visit of the Viceregal party to the Canadian National Exhibition last September.

According to the story told by witnesses, Lady Willingdon was being escorted through the Women's Building. As she was descending a stairway in advance of her escort, her attention was attracted by the badgering of a showman demonstrating an "unbreakable" comb in a stall at the foot of the staircase.

Armed with pliers and a hammer, he twisted and pounded on the combs ranged before him. Inspired by the signs of the crowded stairway, he frenziedly attacked his wares and loudly proclaimed their virtues.

Momentarily fascinated by the extraordinary performance, Lady Willingdon stood stock-still on a lower step. Her escort waited behind her. The entire passage was blocked. Mounting exasperation on the part of the showman gave way.

"Move on there, lady, can't ye see yer blockin' the traffic?"

An outraged gasp came from the escort. Surprise, doubts and finally amusement flickered over the face of Her Excellency. She moved.

Churchill Received Its Name in 1686

CHURCHILL, the terminus of the Hudson Bay Railway at the mouth of Churchill River, first appears on a map in the collection of the Geographic Board of Canada as "Port de Munck." The map is that of the French mapmaker Samson, published in 1860. The reference is to Jens Munk the Danish naval officer who wintered there in 1619-20 with the loss of all the members of his crew except himself and three others. The tragedy so impressed the natives that they called the river Manoneou shit, or Strangers River. Ratine Alan the same Danish River pilot gave the French regime on Hudson Bay. Both names are mentioned by the Canadian Jeremie, who resided twenty years on the bay and published an account of it in 1720. Seven years before Munk landed at Churchill, Sir Thomas Button had sailed down the coast and Button Lake Pose's map of 1635 applies one of Button's names, "Houbart's Hope" to Churchill Bay. The oldest Indian name of the river is Missinippi or Big River, a name that is found in the York Factory journal for 1714. The river received another name in 1775, when Joseph Frobisher from Montreal reached its upper waters and intercepted Indians bound with furs for the "English" post (Churchill) on the bay and called it British River.

The application of the name Churchill is due to the Hudson's Bay Company, for whom Captain John Abraham established a post in 1686, naming post and river after John, Lord Churchill, afterwards Duke of Marlborough, who had been elected governor of the company in the previous year. The post was destroyed by fire about 1688, and because of wars with France, which lasted until 1713, Churchill was not visited again by the company until 1717, when Governor Knight proceeded to it from York Factory and chose a sight for a new post.—Natural Resources.

Socialist to Keep Britain's Purse

By GRATTAN O'LEARY

IF is said that for a bicycle accident cellor of the Exchequer, might still be a Philip Snowden, Britain's Socialist Chancellor of the Exchequer, might still be a humble civil servant. The claim is that it was the literature that he read while lying at an invalid that turned him into a Socialist and induced him to retire from the service, in which he had toiled for seven years. At that time he was twenty-nine years old. He was born of poor parents—his father was a worsted weaver at Cowling, near Keighley—and the young man had a great deal of the democracy associated with natives of the Yorkshire country. Cowling is a village, a small, thriving, manufacturing place, and there are many like it round about the moorlands; and the tradition is that from all of them come characters of a real, dour type, with something of Philip Snowden's musical, high-pitched voice, and with the Snowden facial features and building resolution.

Yorkshiremen, according to this belief, have no use for what measures and anything. They are realists. They believe in knowing what they want, going the shortest way to get it, and knowing what they think, saying it in the fewest possible words. They live a stern life in a stern country, and Philip Snowden is said to be like them all—a product of native climate and the social environment of his native place.

Some of Snowden's critics have regarded him as a romantic. When he first took office in 1924 they expected him to show more of romance than practicability in his budget. But they were wrong. Snowden, it is said, had been thirty-one years preparing himself for that budget. Far from having his head in the clouds he delivered a statement which brought him sixteen from five ex-Chancellors and got his name enrolled among the Fellows of the Royal Statistical Society.

Yet Snowden is essentially the crusader. There is a red-hot passion in his speeches when he is fighting the cause of the poorer brethren; while for sustained and bitter invective he has no superior when he goes in for that sort of thing. He has been called sour, bitter, acrid. Yet Snowden's head is too clear to stop short at the arts of attack. He wants to do things, not merely to denounce things. He is reputed to have said that he never hoped to live to see a Labor Government in office; but once there he was determined so to frame his budget that it might give them the chance of coming back not alone to office but to actual power. So he produced a budget that few Liberals could criticize.

The truth is that Snowden is subtle as well as forcible, a political tactician as well as a determined "constitutional revolutionary." His face is all brains. It is thin, pinched with long years of suffering and he has to hobble about on sticks, and to get up and sit down in answering questions in the House is a fearful strain on him, making him sometimes impatient, petulant, even snappy. But he knows the value of amiability as well, and at times has a fine sense of humor.

When Snowden got over his bicycle accident he went into Keighley and tried to turn that Liberal stronghold over to Socialism. He failed. He gave up the task as hopeless and went over the border to Blackburn. Tories and Liberals alike laughed at the shrunken young man with the weird ascetic and lined face who thought he could win Blackburn.

But in 1906 he polled a record Socialist vote, and at every ball in which he spoke he was a minor god. The Socialists regarded him as something more than human. For twenty years not even a Liberal had ventured to contest the Blackburn Tory stronghold. He was jibed at by his opponents. Some of his enemies invented a fable that he was dismissed from the racket, some said he was an Atheist, but he proudly declined to reply to personalities and kept his speeches on such a high plane that his meetings were revivalist in quality.

The Blackburn factory hands came to love him. He was called "The Saint," and his pretty and clever blonde wife even yet has the corresponding name of "Archangel." The factory hands went straight from the weaving sheds to his halls. They sat hypnotized by an eloquence that was a revelation to them. In 1906 Snowden was elected and held Blackburn invincible until 1918.

All through the war, however, he had been unconquerable pacifist, and that cost him the seat. But such a large and commanding mind could not be kept out of Parliament, and Snowden returned in 1922—this time for Colne Valley.

His career since then is contemporary history. His budget of 1923—the first Labor budget that Britain had known—was masterly for its lucidity; praised by Lord Oxford and Lord Balfour.

General Sir A. Currie Is Never Taken "Aback"

A RATHER striking characteristic of General Sir Arthur Currie, G.C.M.G., former commander of the Canadian corps and principal of McGill University, Montreal, that has received little or no attention is his peculiar mental alertness—his freedom from absence of mind, no matter how busy. In a very marked degree he is "all there" because of this—because of his quick and accurate answers to questions flashed at him—he has proved a godsend to newspaper men.

For example, supposing a sleuth of the press, having heard that a distinguished military man from overseas is to visit Montreal, wants to get in touch for an interview, he is likely to get into communication with Sir Arthur Currie as a starting point. He will be admitted to Sir Arthur without fuss or difficulty, and at once and will say: "Will General Sir Arthur be staying with you while he is in Montreal?"

"No," Sir Arthur will reply, "he will be the guest of Colonel J. S. Dennis at 14 Richelieu Pl., his phone number being Bishop Green 0848."

An answer such as this will be given instanter, much to the joy of the hustling reporter, who appreciates all short-cuts. And it will be given pleasantly. No fumbling, no beating round the bush, no humming and hawing.

This almost divine quality of alertness, with a lofty quality, highly developed—certainly a memory under perfect control—shone forth with unusual splendor during the peak of Sir Arthur's activities, that is during the five or six hectic years following the peace when Sir Arthur was in incessant demand as chief speaker at military anniversary banquets, at the unveiling of statues and memorial tablets and in fact on all those numerous patriotic occasions. Including even those of women's and boys' clubs, when his help would naturally be sought. And somehow Sir Arthur always managed to say something new and splendid on each occasion even when the occasion was comparatively unimportant.

In such a whirl of events an ordinary man would have become distracted and crazy, but Sir Arthur not only "kept his head" but was always courteous and helpful to others even when badly pressed for time, such as when caught between jumps, hurrying from train to auto.

As principal of McGill, Sir Arthur has shed a new lustre over that already illustrious institution. At the time of his appointment to the dignified post in question, one heard frequent remarks in Montreal and elsewhere concerning the "culture" that was required in the position. In fast straight-thinking people began in time to become just a little weary of the repetition of the word and its cognates, jibbers. Of course it was not long before even the most narrow-gauged critics began to realize that Sir Arthur was filling the position in a way no ordinary person could, not only by virtue of his military fame, but also by the force of a strong personality, a clear head and a voice that carries a long distance with the minor distinctions. Although Sir Arthur himself never subscribed to the opinion, there are many who say that he brought more to McGill than McGill brought to him

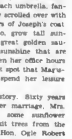
Janey Canuck to Spend Holidays in Own Backyard

WHEN the rest of the world goes vacationing this Summer, Mrs. Emily Murphy (Janey Canuck), famous author, club woman and police magistrate of Edmonton, Alberta, will enjoy her holiday in her own backyard.



Mrs. Emily Murphy

In a small and sequestered spot in her back garden, which recently has been planted with lilacs and white clover, she has set up a big black Palm Beach umbrella, fantastically decked over with the colors of Joseph's coat. Sir Arthur had been pointed out to a rather flustered reporter as one of the outstanding members of the party. The reporter approached the rather unapproachable figure.

"I believe your name is Marriott, sir? I represent one of the newspapers here and would like to get an interview with you."

The subject growled fiercely. "Why do you want to interview me? I don't believe that you even know what I do, do you?"

That was a stumper, for the reporter thought members of Parliament spent all their time being members of Parliament. Sir Arthur was accordingly told so.

"Don't you know I write? Haven't you ever heard of my books? Come the reply still in a growly tone of voice.

Books—Marriott—writer!

All of a sudden a light broke over the reporter's face. "Why Captain Marryat, I'm delighted to meet you. I've read your 'Midship-man Easy' and 'Peter Simple' and—"

Something like a groan broke from the Englishman. There was a muttered quotation about the narrowness of fame. Then a hearty laugh.

"Where can I find a quiet spot? I want to talk to you." The reporter, more flustered than ever, brightened at this. A quiet corner was found, and Sir Arthur explained how his name was spelled, about the books of parliamentary matters he had written, and a great many other things. When he rose to his feet fifteen minutes later he said, "Do you realize this is the first interview I've given since I arrived in Canada?"

Yokohama Christians Would Send Gospel to New York Slums

MRS Archibald M Rusnia, for several years president of the Yokohama Local Council of Women, has recently returned from a visit to her daughter at Jubbulpore, India. She spent many months in India, toured through Burma and traveled down the historic Irrawaddy, staying for a time in Singapore and observed the magnificent plantations of the rubber plantations in the country of the Malays, and finally crossed the Pacific to Victoria on the Empress of France.

Her best story, she says, is for those who like herself have been contributing from time to time to the funds for maintenance of missionary activity. She picked it up from fellow passengers on the Empress, people who attended divine service in Yokohama at the Anglican Church.

The Bishop of Japan presided at this service and made a special appeal for funds. It appeared that in the slums of a great city there were many unfortunate families, Asiatics and non-Christians, to whom needs it was incumbent on the Christians of Japan to minister.

The money was for work among the poor of New York!

Probing Barred

A typical story is going the rounds concerning a witty retort made by the late Chancellor of the Exchequer. The subject under discussion was the income tax returns, and the methods of the collectors. "After all," objected one of the company, "the majority of taxpayers are honest men—even of probity." "Yes," interjected Mr. Churchill, "as long as you don't probe."

Just One More!

"Joe is one of those sawdust lovers."

"Why's that?"

"He always says, 'Just one sawdust and then we'll part.'"

WOULD CHECK PETROL WASTE

Experts Now Devote Much Attention to Underground Pools and Better Methods for Storage of Gasoline

ECONOMIC LOSS IS LARGE TOTAL

NEW YORK, July 5.—Waste has been a hobgoblin of the petroleum industry since the discovery of oil near Titusville, Pa., in 1859.

At that time wells were drilled in such numbers and with so little regard to needs that the precious natural resources flowed over the land and into adjacent streams. Storage facilities were inadequate; in fact, few were provided. The idea was to get the oil as soon as possible. The excess not only was wasted, causing great economic losses, but became a source of fire danger, and history has plenty of records of fire losses arising from this situation.

Today the situation has changed. Storage facilities are provided, every attempt is made to hold to a minimum even the loss through evaporation, but the industry still is not satisfied that the maximum of efficiency has been reached. Deliberate waiting today is out of the question. Although there are occasions when new wells shoot thousands of barrels of oil into the air, it is now possible to bring such wells under control in a surprisingly short time.

Well drillers have no means of estimating the amount of pressure they may encounter, especially when wells go to depths of four and five thousand feet. There is the additional difficulty of determining whether oil will be found in large quantities or at all on any given location.

Drillers who provide the extensive and expensive equipment necessary to meet unusually great production, fire or other emergency, face a financial loss in any event. If production is small, they do not need the equipment brought usually over a long distance. If production is large, their equipment may be insufficient.

With all the inventive genius man has displayed and all the money he has spent to provide storage facilities—metal tanks, pipe lines, great reservoirs—nature still is his superior in the matter of handling oil stocks efficiently. For this reason, the industry today more and more is turning attention to better means of determining, with fair accuracy, the amount of oil and gasoline available in underground pools, and of encouraging drilling engineers to leave the oil in those deep rocky caverns until it actually is needed.

CLEAN THE SPARK PLUGS

To clean a spark plug, simply fill the lower part with alcohol or any liquid metal polish, and allow to stand a few seconds; take a piece of wire covered with one thickness of cloth and rub the carbon from the insulator, then wipe clean and dry thoroughly before replacing in the engine. Cleaning a plug in this way is far better than taking it apart to clean. When a plug is once taken apart there is great danger that it will not be put together securely again, which would cause leakage.

SEE IMPROVEMENT IN WHIPPET CARS

In Completely Redesigned Model Sturdiness and Rigidity Prominently Featured

Sturdiness to an unusual degree is characteristic of the Whippet four and Whippet six chassis which have been completely redesigned both presenting decided improvements over the former types employed.

These improvements include an increase of three inches each in the wheelbase, the employment of heavier materials to give increased strength and stability and a new method of attaching the cross members to the side rails—a marked advancement over previous practice.

The Whippet four side rail is 4¼ x1½x.94 which is much heavier than in its predecessor while the Whippet six shows a side rail 5¼ x2x.94 inches.

A distinct improvement comes in the method of attaching the cross members. In the case of the front member under the radiator, a flange is used so that the member is riveted to both the top and bottom horizontal flanges of the side rail. These flanges are carried forward and turned down so that the maximum value is secured from the metal used.

The intermediate cross member follows the same construction by virtue of the gussets or reinforcements which are riveted to the lower horizontal flange while the member proper is riveted to the upper horizontal flange.

The same method is carried out in the rear member which is a combined cross member and gasoline tank cover. This member is so formed that it is equally fastened to both the upper and lower flanges.

As a result of this advanced type of construction and the employment of heavy materials, the frame is of unusual rigidity and was adopted only after numerous experiments and road tests by the Willys-Overland engineering department proved its absolute efficiency.

CHECKS ENGINE

The ammeter on the car will show whether the silently running engine actually is running.

Watch Electrical System and Save on Repairs

By J. E. SCHIPPERS, S.A.E.

ONE reason for the neglect of electrical units is that owners hesitate to touch them for fear a mistake will put the car out of commission. The result is that many simple little repairs and adjustments are not made, and although the car will continue to run, it will not be 100 per cent efficient. Moreover, the electrical units will be wearing out at a much faster rate than they should, with the result that when the time comes for the repair job to be undertaken it will be much more serious than otherwise would have been the case.

The electrical system's functions are starting, lighting and ignition. The starter is the least essential of the three, because it is always possible to fall back on the hand crank. Of course, nobody wants to do this and the way to keep the starter always functioning, provided there is a good battery on the car, is to see that the battery is fully charged, that all connections are tight and the brushes of the starting motor are clean, so they will make good contact with the commutator.

Very often the starter is equipped with grease-less bearings. It only runs a short time in starting the engine, so that the matter of lubrication is readily taken care of by these impregnated bearings which require no attention on the part of the driver. If there are oil cups on the starting motor as, generally speaking, there are on the generator, four or five drops of oil every 2,000 miles is sufficient lubrication. The brushes of the starting motor and the generator should never be oiled as they contain enough graphite to take care of lubrication.

It is important to oil the generator in accordance with the instructions given above, because the generator is revolving all the time the engine is running. The bearings are continually working and naturally require some oil even though they are of the best anti-friction type. It is bad to over-oil along as thirty miles per hour it is these bearings as it is to under-oil them, so give them just what the instructions call for and no more.

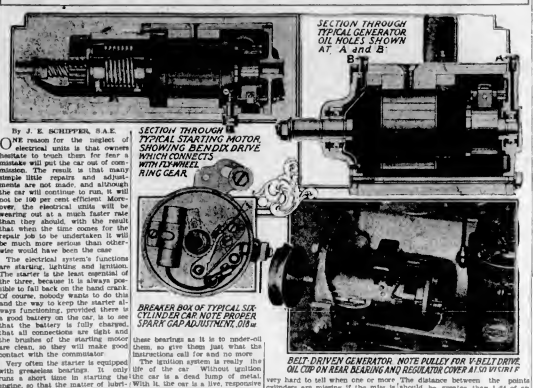
The ignition system is really the life of the car. Without ignition the car is a dead lump of metal. With it, the car is a live, responsive mechanism which will carry its owner wherever and whenever he wants to go.

Perfect ignition exists on only a very small percentage of the cars that are driven about the streets and roads of the country. On most cars the spark is not generating its maximum heat because of one or more minor imperfections in plug adjustment, in a weak coil, leakage of current, improper gap between the breaker points, dirty distributor or a combination of these things. On a great many cars there is an actual condition of misfiring that the owner may never suspect unless he is an expert.

With a multi-cylinder car rolling very hard to well when one or more cylinders are missing if the miss is irregular. If the miss is steady, it soon becomes noticeable, but with a weak coil for instance, the miss may be first in one cylinder and then in another. All of the cylinders may hit evenly for a while and then one or more of them start missing.

For this reason it really pays to have an ignition inspection made by a specialist in this line about twice a year at least. The coil of such an inspection will be more than made up by the fuel saved, the elimination of carbon trouble and better all-around running of the car. The owner himself can see that the spark plugs are clean. If he is equipped with a gauge he can measure the gap and make sure that the proper amount exists between the points. The distance between the points should be greater than 1-64 of an inch, but less than 1-32. Halfway between them is proper. This would be about .020 inch.

If there are any grease or oil cups on the distributor shaft, be sure they are turned up, kept filled and given attention, but in no case put too much oil in or near the distributor as this will cause a greasy formation on the distributor points that will cause misfiring and make the engine very hard to start. A dirty distributor is one of the chief causes for hard starting. Keep all of the ignition units in up-top condition and the car will start easier, give more miles to the gallon and generally better performance. Carbon troubles will also be materially reduced with good ignition.



U.S. TOURISTS GOOD SPENDERS

STATISTICS SHOW AMERICANS LEFT QUARTER BILLION IN CANADA

Growth of Twenty-Five Per Cent in Total Dishonored Parbus Twins Months in 1928

OTTAWA, July 6.—Tourists from the United States and other countries spent more than $250,000,000 in Canada last year, according to an estimate made by the Canadian Bureau of Statistics. This was an increase of nearly $35,000,000 over the value of the tourist trade to the Dominion in 1927, and an advance of nearly $167,000,000 compared with 1922.

The most important factor in the tourist trade of Canada is the automobile traffic between Canada and the United States. The estimated expenditure of this class of tourist in 1928 was $187,384,000, as compared with $154,485,000 in 1927, an increase of $33,000,000, or approximately 20 per cent. The number of tourist automobiles entering Canada increased by about 16 per cent. Tourists who came to Canada from the United States by railway and steamship spent last year $72,521,000, according to the official estimate, or about $5,280,000 more than in 1927.

The great natural assets of Canada, the picturesque scenery, the diversity of lake, forest and river, the many large districts still remaining in their natural state, the healthful and invigorating climate, the charm of the Canadian Winter and its distinctive sports attract tourists in ever increasing numbers to the Dominion.

That Canadians realize the economic importance of this traffic is evidenced by the large sums spent on highway construction and advertising, and by the good accommodation provided by hotels, tourist homes and camps.

Last year Canadian tourists in other countries spent $12,344,000.

BLESSING GIVEN AUTOS

More than five hundred automobiles were blessed by Rev Joseph Morin, pastor of St. Edmund's Church, in Manchester, N.H. The ceremony as practised in France is merely reciting a prayer by the priest to St. Christopher, patron of all travelers, and then sprinkling each car with holy water. Father Morin plans to make the blessing of automobiles an annual custom.

TO MARK FIRST ANNIVERSARY

PLYMOUTH DEALERS IN CANADA WILL OBSERVE FIRST CELEBRATION

Local Agents Extend Special Invitation to Public to Visit Yates St. Showrooms This Week

Plymouth car dealers throughout the Dominion have prepared their showrooms with unique displays in celebration of the car's first anniversary, which takes place from July 6 to July 13, inclusive. During this period Thomas Plimley, Ltd., local dealers, invite the public to visit their showrooms, inspect and drive these stylish but low-priced Chrysler-built Plymouth cars. The complete line of body styles with a variety of color combinations will be on display.

Unusual interest is attached to this first birthday of the Plymouth, due to the fact that during this year it has been greeted so enthusiastically that production records for the entire industry have been shattered. No other car has ever reached such high production within such a short period after the car was introduced as has the Plymouth.

"The enthusiasm with which the Plymouth has been greeted," said John C. McGuire, "is due to the quality that is evident throughout the construction of the car, in power, speed, unusual accelerating ability, beauty, and comfort. It rivals cars of a much higher price and is an unusual value in its price class."

"One year ago when Chrysler officials put into production this lowest priced Chrysler Motors automobile they were determined to build a car that would be sturdy dependable, with rugged strength, and with freedom from any limitations that would prevent it being the leader in its field. So accurately did the qualities possessed by this car typify that stalwart band of Britishers from Plymouth, England, who pioneered settlements in America, that it was only natural that that name should be chosen to designate this new car."

Visitors to the showrooms during this anniversary will be given the opportunity to inspect thoroughly and drive the Improved Plymouth. A number of further improvements throughout the chassis and the body have recently been announced and these are expected to create an unusual amount of interest with the motor wise public. Plymouth body engineers have spent several months in working out new designs to give the Plymouth the strongest and most rugged bodies in its price class.

"A thorough demonstration is all that is needed to convince one that it is a car of exceptional worth," Mr McGuire remarked recently. "It is a car that will easily prove itself given the opportunity to do so."

De Soto Six in Record Endurance Run

THIS standard De Soto Six Roadster, averaging 827 miles an hour on a continuous 24-hour run, including stops for refueling, recently set a new speed record for South Africa. It took turns at strong beside the driver as the car speeded over the sun-baked track of hard mud and level stone in the Blue Bird Pan, named for Capt. Malcolm Campbell's famous racing car.

FORD AVERAGES 8,000 CARS DAILY

Canadian and United States Plants Maintain Steady Output With 160,000 Orders Unfilled

Ford production in the United States maintains its steady pace of 1,500 cars a day whereas the Canadian Company are producing 400 to 500 cars per day. The demand in the United States still leaves Ford with some 300,000 orders unfilled and no immediate let-up in the demand.

Performance of this car has indeed been outstanding and it is to be seen on the highways and the byways of all parts of the country. Not only has it proved a wonder car in city traffic but tourists recommend it as a comfortable and economical car for long distance travel. They particularly stress the pleasure of its handling on the open road at high speeds and the thrill that it gives to its owner.

Safety in its performance is one of the most outstanding merits of the car and the combination of these features have been a decided factor in the keen demand for the various models today. Registrations throughout the United States and Canada are running between 30 and 35 per cent of the total. The Ford Motor Company policy of no yearly models but one of the continued improvement insures the owner against large depreciation and keeps his car up to the standard of today.

Many features exclusive to the higher priced cars are embodied in this car and many patents covering construction engineering points of the car are held exclusively by Ford Motor Company. Features such as Houdaille Hydraulic Shock Absorbers, three-quarter floating rear axles, the use of roller and ball bearings in place of bushings, triplex shatterless glass in the windshield, all steel body construction are features exclusive to the higher priced cars. Patents cover the spring suspension, construction of the gas tank in one unit, etc., in addition to which there are 600 electrical welding operations replacing the conventional bolts and nuts. Dealers throughout the country are now giving special demonstrations to all prospective purchasers.

WELL ATTENDED

A man slipped on a banana peel and executed a very funny fall. He was not hurt, fortunately, but his dignity was somewhat ruffled. When he recovered, a moment later, a friend was holding his hat and a number of people had formed a circle.

"What do these idlers want?" snarled the victim of the banana skin.

"They are not idlers," explained his friend soothingly. "Here's a doctor who wants to look you over, a lawyer ready to bring an action for you, and a producer of comic films who would like to earn you up."

MARQUETTE SOLD "SIGHT UNSEEN"

Resident of Alaskan Town Sends Check on Strength of Salesman's Description

Long-distance record for sale of a new automobile sold "sight-unseen" is claimed by the Eldridge-Buick Company, of Seattle, which reports receipt of a cheque for a new Marquette sedan from a resident of Seward, Alaska, 1,800 miles by boat from Seattle.

Another car has been shipped to Ketchikan, and inquiry for several Marquettes has been received from Anchorage, still farther north than Seward.

"All of which expresses confidence in the ability of the Buick factory, long known to be a builder of a dependable fine car, to build a dependable car in the reach of millions," officials of the Eldridge Company assert.

DE SOTO SURPRISES TESTER OF BRAKES

Detroit Police Have Eyes Opened in Annual Safety Campaign by "Six" Performance

The decelerometer, a device for registering brake tests, is being used by the police for the first time in connection with annual safety campaigns conducted by the police departments in various cities.

The first car chosen for such a test during the opening day of a safety drive in Detroit, Mich., was a De Soto Six sedan with its established reputation for exceptionally dependable and efficient braking equipment. The decelerometer, which resembles a speedometer, was clamped to the running board of the sedan and the De Soto demonstrated its ability to stop quickly at various speeds without the slightest indication of side-swaying, so often disastrous when brakes are applied at a high rate of speed.

The instrument functions perfectly, according to the police, who have carried out many thousand tests since the campaign opened. The figures on a dial that shows the number of feet required to come to a full stop after the brakes are applied by the driver are set at zero. Another dial for showing the speed to be tested is set before the run is begun. The police expressed surprise when the reading taken from the decelerometer attached to the De Soto showed this car exceeded their requirements by more than fifty per cent, coming to a dead stop in less that half the distance demanded of all cars by the officials.

Detroit this year is carrying on a six weeks' drive in place of the regular week set aside each year to test brakes of cars driven in the city. The test is not compulsory but voluntary on the part of drivers. Following successful tests a sticker given by the examining officials is fixed to the windshield and shows the inspection has been passed. Lights, horns and driving permits also are included in the inspection.

RECORD ECONOMY IN 100,000 MILES

Chevrolet Roadster Operates at Total Cost of Two and Half Cents Per Mile

An operating and economy record which is said to have been equaled by few motor car owners was brought out recently when Joe McMullen, sand and gravel dealer in Seattle, turned in his 1926 Chevrolet roadster as part payment on one of the new six-cylinder models. McMullen explained that his had kept a careful check on every item of expense for the car as he was interested in making a personal test to determine the minimum figure required to drive a modern automobile.

The Chevrolet roadster had been driven by McMullen well over 100,000 miles. He pointed out that this mileage was not made under particularly advantageous driving conditions but during the pursuance of his regular business routine. According to the data collected by McMullen, the average operating cost of the Chevrolet was two and one-half cents per mile.

"I was constantly amazed at the low cost of transportation obtainable from a Chevrolet," declared McMullen. "When I purchased the car its operating economy was one of the features that appealed to me most, and my figures indicate that even my fondest expectations in this respect were exceeded. As high as thirty-eight miles to the gallon of gasoline has been the average on many trips where I have checked the gas mileage."

It was only natural when Mr. McMullen decided to purchase a 1929 model car that he should turn to Chevrolet. He expressed the opinion that with the improvements, increased power and tested motor that characterizes the new six-cylinder car, he should be able to continue obtaining comparative low transportation cost.

Add up the reasons for De Soto success

No car in the first year of its life can attain the leadership that De Soto has won without basically sound reasons at the root of that success.

De Soto gives more in performance than any other car in its field will give, and in addition it has an individuality of its own that sets it apart from any other car in any class.

De Soto is alert, nimble and speedy. It is easy to handle and has surprising riding qualities. Its prompt acceleration is remarkable, and its braking is positive and instantaneous because of its hydraulic 4-wheel brakes—not to be found on any other low-priced six.

It is economical to operate, and it is so staunch and sturdy in construction that maintenance is a negligible factor.

Being Chrysler-built, it carries the mighty prestige of a Chrysler creation and has an assured trade-in value.

De Soto Six is a smart and stylish car of which any owner may well be proud. We invite you to get behind the wheel and experience the thrill—today and without obligation.

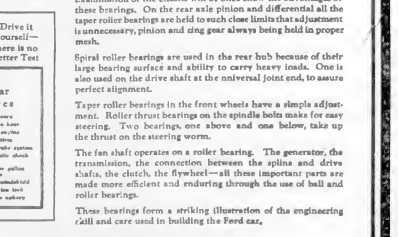
24 BALL and ROLLER Bearings



Reduces Friction and Makes for Ease of Operation

LAVISH use of ball and roller bearings in the Ford car greatly reduce friction and contribute to easier operation and longer life of the car. Note the coasting ability of the Ford car as compared to any other automobile in its weight class.

Examination of the chassis will at once show the advantages of these bearings. On the rear axle pinion and differential all the taper roller bearings are held to such close limits that adjustment is unnecessary, pinion and ring gear always being held in proper mesh.

Spiral roller bearings are used in the rear hub because of their large bearing surface and ability to carry heavy loads. One is also used on the drive shaft at the universal joint end, to assure perfect alignment.

Taper roller bearings in the front wheels have a simple adjustment. Roller thrust bearings on the spindle bolts make for easy steering. Two bearings, one above and one below, take up the thrust on the steering worm.

The fan shaft operates on a roller bearing. The generator, the transmission, the connection between the splins and drive shafts, the clutch, the flywheel—all these important parts are made more efficient and enduring through the use of ball and roller bearings.

These bearings form a striking illustration of the engineering skill and care used in building the Ford car.

"VICTORIA'S FORD DEALERS"

AGENT CELEBRATES 25TH ANNIVERSARY

Newark Dealer Marks Quarter of Century as Successful Peerless Distributor

Few distributors now engaged in the automobile business can boast of having sold cars through all the stages of evolution from the chugging, two-cylinder car of a quarter century ago to the fast, powerful, straight eight of today.

One of these rare individuals is J. W. Mason, Peerless distributor of Newark, N.J., who celebrated his silver anniversary as an automobile man last week.

L. R. German, Peerless president, and other executives of the big Cleveland factory attended a testimonial dinner given Mr. Mason by newspaper and automobile men of Newark.

It was back in 1900, when people first started to think and talk about automobiles, that Mr. Mason decided that the new industry offered a wonderful opportunity for going into business. Accordingly, he began buying and selling used cars, and continued this trading for four years, when he entered the new car business, handling one of the well-known cars of that day.

The Peerless representative first called on their present Newark distributor before the World War, and the car made such an impression on Mr. Mason that he decided should he ever enter what was then the high-priced field, the Peerless would be his logical choice. The call came five years after—in 1916. Mr. Mason signed with the Peerless Motor Car Corporation, and has confined his attentions to its products ever since.

Mr Mason's first place of business was a small garage. Today the home of J. W. Mason & Sons is one of the finest and most complete automobile establishments in the East.

But the above illustration shows the Studebaker President Eight Roadster which paced the 500-mile Memorial Day race at Indianapolis, and standing beside it is the president of The Studebaker Corporation, Albert Russel Erskine. Harold St. Vance, vice-president in charge of manufacturing, is at the wheel, with Paul G. Hoffman, vice-president in charge of Studebaker sales, at his right.

Suppose Mr. Speeder--- Your Own Child

Suppose that your child should leave its own yard
For a romp, or in search of a ball,
If its mother were busy, or had not the time
To step out and give it a call.
Suppose that some speeder should race down your street,
As though he were taking a cure,
And crush the life out of your little child,
Mr. Speeder, do you think you would care?

Suppose that your mother were crossing the street,
Your mother, now feeble and old,
And some careless driver should knock her aside,
Leaving her lifeless and cold,
Could you find an excuse for this careless act?
Would you really think it were fair?
Now, putting yourself in the other man's place,
Mr. Speeder, do you think you would care?

Suppose that some loved one you held very dear
Were the victim of some speeder's game,
And he lay in his bed just day after day
All helpless and crippled and lame,
Suppose that he never could walk any more,
No longer your pleasures could share,
Just be there and suffer, day in and day out,
Mr. Speeder, do you think you would care?

Oh, how little you think of the other man's pain,
In your lawless pleasure and greed.
How little you care what it costs someone else
As you drive at your daze-devil speed.
But should this trouble occur in your family some day
For you and your loved ones to share,
You'll slacken your speed and take time to think.
And then, Mr. Speeder, you'll care.

PACKARDS GET CLOSE INSPECTION

Gruelling Final Tests Undergone by New Cars Before Leaving Factory

One of the most important inspection operations which is employed by the Packard Motor Car Company is that which is given each motor after it has been driven nine hours by an electric motor to get all parts working smoothly together. It also follows thorough tests given on the dynamometer while operating under its own power.

The motors are mounted in a revolving fixture which turns them upside down easily and quickly. Thus mounted for ease of handling they are almost completely disassembled. All of the bearings are examined and carefully checked with gauges. Pistons are taken out and inspected. The cylinder head is removed. Practically all moving parts are closely examined.

This is in addition to the exhaustive tests through which the motor must pass on the dynamometer stands. An interesting feature of these tests is the use of the stethoscope for listening to all of the parts of the motor while running. Each motor on the dynamometer stand gets an exact horse power reading.

A further check of each motor is given after it is mounted on a car and sent out on the road for the road test to which every car is subjected.

Custom-type! The smartest, most distinctive, convertible car in the world. Auburn introduced this Phaeton Sedan as a production model and made it available for the first time under $3000 So popular was this model on our 88 chassis last year that at no time could our utmost production efforts keep up with the demand. Yet, following Auburn's policy of making our owners the beneficiaries of Auburn's increasing success, we are introducing this new Model 90 with greater horsepower and even greater value for less cost.

Again the demand for the rare combination of its power, stamina, comfort and convertible advantages will exceed the supply. The top can be easily lowered and fits snugly into a neat boot. All four door-glasses may be raised or lowered at will, whether the top is up or down. It is an entirely open touring car or a completely closed car, as you wish. Of course, it is a Straight Eight! We sincerely urge you to place your order early. Thousands who delayed had to have their deposits returned last year.

WHAT LUBRICATION IS TO MACHINERY--

Gum-Dipping IS TO TIRES

As the film of oil prevents friction of metal parts, so does the film of rubber surrounding every fibre and strand of Firestone cord, protect it against heat and friction within the cord itself due to continual flexing.

The Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping represents the greatest achievement in tire building. By thus saturating and insulating the cord fiber with liquid rubber, thousands of additional miles of service have been built into Firestone Tires.

This means that you get most mileage for least money—with greatest safety, comfort and satisfaction—when you equip your car with Firestones.

Your nearest Firestone Dealer saves you money and serves you better. See him today.

CHESS NEWS AND NOTES

England — The Dimbit Chess Rooms Tournament. This event ended when A. H. Cowan lost to P. D Yates and W. Winter beat the Indian champion, Tulsan Khan. Winter retained the better opening and early obtained a winning advantage, but the Indian champion put up a stout resistance lasting seventy moves. Yates beat Winter in the final and secured first place. The scores: Yates, 5, lost 1. Winter, 4-2. Sultan Khan and Cowan, 3½-4½, each.

The London-Washington Cable Match—The International Chess Federation, F.I.D.E. has rendered a decision in favor of Washington on the protest based on the fact that M.E. Goldstein, of London retracted one of his moves he had played by error, on the ground that one of the letters at the London end had been left out and made a mistake in decoding a move of his opponent. The score is therefore changed to 3-3. The tie prevents London from getting permanent possession of the trophy. The match went on record as London, 3½, Washington, 2½, so London had won one game and drawn the other five.

South Africa. A letter to The British Chess Magazine on a Transvaal chess club says: "We our chess club was formed, and just as Gibraltarian is a microcosm of Gibraltar, we have fifteen members—five British, five Dutch and five belonging to a very ancient and brainy race who originally conquered Palestine, a few of whom are to be found in most South African towns. Our class two all have a brilliant chess future behind them. Class three continues enough each beat class two 3 games out of 3, but then our third prides itself on being not as other clubs. For instance, quick play is fostered by the universal habit of taking back one's moves—that is, if you can see your mistake before the other fellow has made his move. Not mistake of course. If you see a Knight empire, you just grab it, trap or no trap. Try to one if you ponder your move your adversary will have it back. Sometimes he even wants the piece back after you have removed it from the board and neatly dropped it into the box. Another motto of our club is 'Every game a consultation.' Three or four members are invariably clustered round each side of the board and unwanted advice is freely and intensely offered. One is warned too, though it is considered polite to do this in the third person. If he take der Rook he is schirmonde. 'What nonsense you are talking already. How can a man be schirmonde? Can he play on his Bishop and threaten the Queen, I tells you. If he takes der Rook he is schlemonde.' The arguments attract the attention of the captain of play. He stalks over to the scene of the commotion glances at the position, and pronounces the perfunctory words 'Der man is not schlemonde. It is a win for White.' Jupiter has spoken and the hubbub dies down for a moment. Curiously enough Black wins, but that is due to White being so 'hocked' by the approval of a man who was overseen by a man who was beaten by Murphy that the poor fellow becomes over-cautious and overlooks a simple mate by his opponent."

France—The Championship—Dr. Alechin states that the report from Havana that his match with Capablanca had fallen through and he had asked Capablanca to renew negotiations was entirely erroneous. The world champion said he fully expected to play with Bogoljubow in Germany and Holland, beginning in September, and added that should the match fail he maintained it would not become him to make advances to any challenger. However, that Dr. Alechin expects to play in the best of news and contains logical reasoning for it is difficult to understand why Bogoljubow's backers would be willing to put up the prize money unless prepared to go through.

The Future of Chess—That the champion is not in agreement with Capablanca's dismal opinion as to the future of chess is shown by his speech at New York it cannot imagine that chess will die. We may possibly experience a period of lethargy of a temporary character, but even if that should be so, the adverse game will remain as beautiful as ever and continue to give its devotees more and more intellectual satisfaction. There is no chance, of course, that after many years the worst may happen, but it cannot bring myself to believe it. For the present, however, let us all enjoy it to the utmost."

United States Intercollegiate Championship—Final scores. F. Reinfeld, New York University, 8-1, T. H. Bayer, 5½-1½; A. B. Kasman 5-2. Eight competed. Reinfeld is leading in the Tennek event a.

Marshall C.C.—This weekly rapid transit was won by J. Bonora, 7-0. Rudolf Shurka, 5-2; H. Hanauer, 4½-2½.

ANSWER TO YESTERDAY'S PUZZLE

BLISTER RUST FOUND PERIL TO WHITE PINE

Destructive Fungus Starts in Fruit Bushes and Spreads to Pine Trees

MONTREAL, July 4—White pine blister rust, a rare disease that was first brought into Canada from Europe in 1907 on imported white pine nursery stock, is now doing damage to white pine trees at Rouville, Quebec, as reported to a serious menace to the white pine trees in the Dominion. Confirmation of the reported blister rust at Rouville in Megantic has been made by Dr. H. T. Gussow, Dominion botanist, and A. W. McCallum, forest pathologist, who have visited the infected area recently, and advise the destruction of all the currant and gooseberry bushes in that district in order to save the pines, as the fungus is spread by the trees from currant bushes in question.

The Gazette says: "About seven years ago an outbreak took place at St. Andrews East, Quebec. From there it has spread to the vicinity of Hudson Heights. All pines having their leaves in clusters of five are subject to attack by blister rust. The fungus cannot spread directly from pine to pine, but must first pass through an intermediate stage on currant or gooseberry bushes. Dr. Gussow said yesterday that if the farmers and residents of the Hudson Heights district wish to save the beautiful white pines of the district as well as the new plantations, they must destroy all currant and gooseberry bushes, both cultivated and wild.

"A regular campaign should be initiated at once to eliminate these bushes. All currant and gooseberry bushes growing within 900 feet of the pines should be removed. In the case of cultivated black currants, which are especially susceptible to rust, it is absolutely necessary to remove these for a distance of one mile from the pines to be protected.

"Blister rust is a disease fatal to white pines. It is caused by a fungus which completes its life cycle by growing upon currant or gooseberry leaves. The fungus enters a pine tree by way of the needles, and from these grows downward into the bark.

"It is an insidious disease because it is only during May and June of each year, when the blisters appear, that it is at all conspicuous. The spores produced by the perennial cankers on the pine help to infect eventually all currants and gooseberries in the vicinity in the spring and in late Summer and Autumn the rust spores infect the pine.

"A stand of white pine may thus appear in the cultivated fields quite healthy, even though it may be very seriously infected with rust. Dead branches with yellow leaves appearing among the green foliage of a tree are often indications of the presence of rust."

Canadian Nurses Set High Standard

EDMONTON, Alta., July 4—Directions in the arts, crafts and the maintaining of the high standards set by Canadian nurses, where ever they are found received emphasis in the addresses to the graduating class by Dr. J. D. Harrison, one of Edmonton's longest practising physicians. The doctor had found no less than eight graduates from the General holding responsible positions in the Mayo hospitals, while in New York, Boston, Chicago, San Diego and even Brooklyn he found only the highest praise for Canadian nurses, who he had met.

World-Famous Stories

THE FAITHFUL GHOST

By JEROME K. JEROME

(Jerome K. Jerome, born in 1859, was an English humorist. His best known works are "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow" and "Three Men in a Boat.")

I was little more than a lad when I first met with Johnson. I was in the City of London, working, and, it being Christmas Eve, I had been allowed to sit up very late On opening the door of my little bedroom to go in, I found myself face to face with Johnson, who was coming out. It passed through me and, uttering a long, low wail of misery, disappeared out of the staircase window

I was startled for the moment—I was only a schoolboy at the time—and had never seen a ghost before—and felt a little nervous about going to bed. But, on reflection, I remembered that it was only silly people that spirits could do any harm to, and so locked myself up and went to sleep.

In the morning I told my father what I had seen.

"Oh, yes, that was old Johnson," said he. "Don't you be afraid of him—he lives here." And then he told me the poor thing's history.

It seemed that Johnson, when it was alive, had loved, in early life, the daughter of a former tenant of our house, a very beautiful girl, whose Christian name had been Emily. My father did not know her other name

Johnson was too poor to marry the girl, so he kissed her good-bye told her he would soon be back, and went off to Australia to make his fortune.

But Australia was not then what it became later on. Travelers through the bush were few and far between in those early days; and Johnson, after he had made his portable property found upon the road, was robbed of everything negotiable value to pay the simple funeral expenses rendered necessary by his death. It took Johnson nearly twenty years to make his fortune

The self-imposed task was accomplished at last, however, and, having successfully eluded the police and got clear out of the country, he returned to England, full of hope and joy, to claim his bride. He reached home safely, found his silent and deserted. All that the neighbors could tell him was that, soon after his own departure, the family had one morning, night disappeared, and that nobody had ever seen or heard anything of them since, although the landlord and most of the local tradesmen had made searching inquiries.

Poor Johnson, frenzied with grief, sought his lost love all over the world. But he never found her, and after years of fruitless search he returned to end his lonely life in the very house where, in the happy bygone days, he and his beloved Emily had passed so many blissful hours.

He had lived there quite alone, wandering about the empty rooms, weeping and calling to his Emily to face to face with Johnson, who was coming out. It passed through me and, uttering a long, low wail of misery, disappeared out of the staircase window

HISTORY OF AERONAUTICS

Vincenzo Lamberti

OVER in Milan a man named Gerolli had manufactured a hot air balloon. He was friend of Caliber Paul Ordeani, and early in 1784 the machine made several trips across country by means of a tire placed beneath the opening of the balloon. Ordeani, fearless of risk, experimented so near his own town of Naples, Ferdinando Lamberti, Lamberti to invent improvements. The balloon was unstable and was lost all right in its way, but it seemed to Lamberti that two weak points it needed a hot fire to keep it afloat, a dangerous thing at all times, and it could travel only with the wind. And so Lamberti, who was an engineer, designed an airship that would have none of those objections able features. He was a hydrogen balloon about 50 feet in diameter, and it contained a rudder attached with to steer the craft and a set of sails by which it might be maneuvered through upper currents. Lamberti lived long enough to see various other hydrogen balloons and hot air balloons make trips over his native Italy, he lasted to see the child of his own genius make the first trial. And for the great reason that the problems of the air which these men thought very similar to the problems of water navigation, were still problems and that their solution was awaiting a technical store of scientific assistance that could come only with knowledge that increased but slowly throughout another century

There are two situations in Bridge quite aggravating than to find oneself in a strong Opponent's Suit. It will be seen in the play of this deal that Black, after the first trick, and intend to discard helpfully, but Declarer goes game.

SALIENT POINTS OF THE BIDDING

Auction Bids are fourth bids originally one No Trump which West doubling he leads card strength and distribution will fitted to support a Major suit response by partner, doubles negative.

North, bidding six Diamonds headed in four Quick Tricks, has average expectancy of high card support. In his sixth hopper he bidding less Diamonds over West's double thus providing South with the information that may enable him to go over West No Trumps or offer an alternative bid

The final play has weak to recommend it. South, now assured of a strong Diamond holding in hand of partner, bids two No Trumps which contains no bidding as West's strength is not sufficient to warrant a second opening bid.

Instract Bidding: The only variation from the foregoing at Contract is that, following the lead of Diamond ruff, South bids three No Trumps, his distribution, his Aces Trick strength, and his high intermediates justify the game declaration Holding double stoppers in Spades and Hearts and four Clubs to the King-10 he should not ask North by bidding but two No Trumps, to do that which he should clearly do himself.

THE PLAY

West opens the 2 of Clubs, East plays the deuce and South, wisely with Ace King. Rouh now leads the Jack of Diamonds which East refuses to win so South may hold his two cards of the Diamond suit. To the third trick, South leads the Diamond 8 West discards the Spade 2 and East wins with the King unable to hold off any longer and unless to do so if he could

East now leads a small Club. West winning this trick and the two tricks with the Ace, Jack and 8 of Clubs, thereafter lays down the King of Hearts to establish a fifth trick to clap the No Trump game. Unable South wins the King of Heart lead with the Ace and now is left with four good Diamonds in Dummy. West is now forced to make four discards. South to make three On Dummy's Trick Ten West must either discard his Queen of Hearts (his making Dummy's Jack) good or he must unguard his King of Spades.
